Russian fuel tanker reaches U.S. waters

By Sandra L. Medearis

A Russian tanker carrying 1,062,000 gallons of Korean vehicle diesel fuel for Nome retailer Bonanza Fuel reached Dutch Harbor waters in Alaska's Aleutian Islands Monday afternoon where it underwent U.S. Coast Guard inspections to ensure it met all U.S. laws and regulations for security, safety and environmental concerns. The fuel supply will help counter a foreseen shortage of fuel for gas tanks in the arctic town of 3,468 where temperatures in the minus 25-30 degree range for several weeks discourage walking. Contrary to continued erroneous reports and rumors, the town's two petroleum products distributors have enough heating fuel on hand for the winter, according to their

A waiver of the Merchant Marine Act of 1920 (Jones Act) will allow the foreign-flagged double-hulled, ice class tanker to take on an additional 300,000 gallons of gasoline at Dutch Harbor and then head northward to the edge of the ice pack, about 300 miles from Nome. Under current plans, the tanker will join the USCG icebreaker and scientific research vessel S/V Healy at Dutch Harbor. Plans call for the two vessels to head northward and reach the edge of the ice pack Jan. 4 or 5, where Healy will lead the fuel vessel crashing through 300 miles of sea ice to within half a mile of Nome for an estimated Jan. 7 arrival. Then the Russian T/V Renda, certified to travel through four feet of ice, will continue toward the City of Nome fuel docks on its own. It is expected that the Renda's draught will not allow it to pull up to fuel headers, but

Coastal Zone petitions now available in region

By Diana Haecker

The Alaska Sea Party, specifically formed to push the citizens coastal management program initiative, has sent out petition booklets around the state of Alaska to collect signatures to put the issue on the ballot for the next general election. In Nome, petition booklets awaiting signatures are at Kawerak Inc., Nome City Hall and The Nome Nugget. Other petition booklets in the region are with Blanche Okbaok and Carolyn Oquiluk in Teller, Ed Kotongan in Elim, Ruby Nassuk in Koyuk, Paul Rookok Sr. in Savoonga, Frances Degnan in Unalakleet, Sean Komonaseak, Sr. in Wales, Amy Titus and Enid Lincoln in White Mountain. The petitioners are hoping to gather 26,000 signatures by January 17 for the petition to go on the ballot. The booklets are to be mailed back to Juneau on January 6.

The initiative tries to bring back a different version of the Alaska Coastal Management Program that died a long painful death in the legislature last year. The initiative shows differences between the old

State approves Rock Creek mine closure plan

State large mine regulators signed off on reclamation and closure plans of the failed Rock Creek gold mine six miles north of Nome and opened a 15-day public comment period on January 5. The failed mine's operator, Alaska Gold Company, submitted a two-phase final reclamation and closure plan to be completed by the end 2012. However, state regulators also say that AGC is in talks with landowners Sitnasuak Native Corporation and Bering Strait Native Corporation for potential land acquisition of the entire Rock Creek mine site. The mine, mill and tailings storage facility are located on privately owned land by AGC, Sitnasuak and BSNC. As of press time on Monday, the offices of the involved parties were closed and could not be reached for comment.

On Thursday, January 5, the Department of Natural Resources' large mine team will release the mine's closure documents including a reclamation and closure plan, the revised closure estimate and the DNR's draft reclamation plan approval. Hard copies are at City Hall in Nome, the Kegoayah Kozga Library and the DNR offices in Fairbanks and Anchorage.

The plan, large mine coordinator Sharmon Stambaugh said, consists of two phases. Phase one involves removing the water from the tailing storage facility, installing a temporary synthetic cover over the existing tailings and breaching the dam from top to bottom. Prior to closure in 2008, the mine had milled 100,000 tons of ore, which were put through the full gravity and flotation circuit and the cyanide leach and carbon re-

Stambaugh said that the cyanide-leached ore was subjected to treatment for destruction of free cyanide and then combined with the tailing from the flotation circuit. The combined tailings were then processed in a paste tailing thickener and dumped in the TSF.

The plan shows that Alaska Gold wants to complete the dewatering of the TSF in February and March. Asked how this is proposed to be done, considering the amount of snow and ice that is collected in the TSF, Stambaugh said that the tailings storage facility will be dewatered to the maximum extent practicable by pumping the water to the water treatment plant. She added that ice may be removed from the tailings storage facility, the tailings would be covered with a synthetic liner and a runoff diversion ditch would be constructed upslope of the tailings to direct break-up flow to the breach. Stambaugh said that the dam would be breached down to the original ground surface so that it cannot impound any water in the future.

Phase II consists of removing the tailings and storing them along with the waste rock and unprocessed ore into the mine pit; completely tearing down the mill and other buildings, removing the concrete slabs, all equipment, re-contouring the land, placing top soil on it and reseeding the land with a mixture of tufted hair-

Letters —

Dear Editor:

I was Facility Director of the Seaside Center in Nome from May, 2007 to May, 2009, working for Cornell Companies. My employment with them was terminated in April 2010. A contractor with Cornell (whom wanted me to break policy and contractual obligations) notified management that if they had not terminated me, they would have pulled the contract. Despite my nearly nine years (and zero corrective actions), instead of fighting for me, [Cornell] chose to terminate (and in the process, fabricated stories of my demise to all involved). This is the short story – in actuality, it was a convoluted mess into which Cornell dumped me. It took some time to ratify and accept what they did to me, but it is much to my chagrin that I hear they (now the Geo Group, after having purchased Cornell) are still up to their old tricks.

Over the last year, several lettersto-the-Editor have appeared in the Nome Nugget. These apparently were from recently released (now ex) residents of Seaside Center. There were stories of employee misconduct; (its current) director malfeasance; violations of health and welfare - not to mention violations of their contract with the State of Alaska and of their own policies and procedures. Are these stories true? Hard to tell; however, having spoken with some familiar with the situation, they sound nine of ten as to their veracity. I urge the State of Alaska to thoroughly investigate, and also ask the City of Nome to peruse the conditional correctional permit that was issued back when the facility was "in compliance." To

Lemonade

Storms, mechanical failures, politics and economics weigh heavily into the Bonanza fuel crisis that looms over Nome's horizon. Mother Nature threw a sack of lemons our way and we can either pucker, or make lemonade.

Nome is guite capable of getting through the winter without the extra gasoline. Thanks to the media hype the rest of the world thinks we have been swallowed by the Ice Age. Although the arrival of the Russian fuel tanker with an array of fuels for Bonanza will make the prospect of lowering the thermostat a bit more palatable, the question that begs to be answered is "Who will pay for this"? This fuel delivery will be an exercise in international cooperation and bureaucratic navigation. The prospect of a dangerous delivery of over a million gallons of fuel through a mile of 4" diameter hose is scary and brings to mind a leaky garden hose. The City of Nome employees deserve our recognition for opening the Port of Nome and facilitating fuel delivery in temperatures well into the negative F° range. They and their equipment usually work when the temperatures are much warmer. The Coast Guardsmen on the Healy deserve praise for giving up their holiday time with their families to break ice to bring the Russian fuel tanker to Nome. This brings to light the need for the U.S. to have a fleet of icebreakers, not just one.

We can learn a lot from this situation. We need to order fuel into Nome at a much earlier date. We have to be able to deal with the vagaries of nature. We should be judicious in our use of gasoline and be less reliant on petroleum products. We need to promote natural gas and hybrid fuel cars. We can turn lemons into lemonade. —N.L.M.—

some extent, these entities may have already done this. However, if even a few of these violations still exist, the governmental entity has the obligation to act. Like always, the Geo Group will expectedly comply with even the strictest of sanctions, as the Alaska facilities are undoubtedly important to the company's bottom line.

If the problems that plague Seaside Center no longer exist, then mazel tov; if there happens to be truth to these troubling letters, and no action has occurred as a result, then the Geo Group needs to hire some new and experienced staff or fold. Its oversight manager, who terminated me and does not live in Nome needs to be chastised for allowing this to continue, and possibly be given his walking papers (as he himself has done to many good people). Keep in mind I realize this may appear to come from a bitter, disgruntled exemployee of Cornell, now looking to take vengeance against those who wronged him. I take no such stand. There are things I regret and wished could have been done differently. I wasn't a perfect manager while working at Seaside Center but I certainly tried to do the right thing. I would like nothing more than to return to work for Seaside Center. which is even more unlikely considering the printing of this letter. But I'll be damned if I allow the same company and supervisors to treat its people the same as they've treated me. The people of Nome, and the staff and residents of Seaside Center, deserve nothing less.

Dear Nome Editor

Thank you for printing the beautiful obituary of Deanna Kingsgton

In 2005 and 2006 summer seasons, many King Island elders, some of their children and grand-children, myself included were fortunate to travel to our place of birth, King Island. Mainly through the efforts, vision and hard work of Dr. Deanna Kingston, then of the Anthropology Dept. of Oregon State University. She is the daughter of Olga Muktoyuk Kingston who was born and raised in King Island.

Deanna was able to obtain funding to safely bring many King Island elders, some of their strong children and grand-children of the elders who assisted scientists in botany, anthropology, birds, and photography in their specimen collections and studies which are now available thru OSU websites.

Many elders, who were never able to return to King Island on their own, a place of their birth and home of many years are so grateful to have been able to make these trips thru Deanna's efforts to accomplish them.

We thank you Nancy for affording more recognition in your newspaper of Deanna's efforts and accomplishments that benefitted OSU, some of its scientists, and families and elders of King Island. Becky Amarok Anchorage

Hello out there,

As we head into the New Year, I hope that all of you will remember that your body is only human, and it could freeze, so please dress accordingly. Each and every one of you counts so please tell other people where you are going if you decide to travel anywhere. Eeenikee you anyway if you hit anyone—shame on you.

Like in the case of J. O. You cannot help the person you love (unless they do it themselves willingly), no matter how much you try. Maybe you stay for the sake of the children, or the guy threatens to kill you if you try to leave, that doesn't make it right for you to be a punching bag. Where is our justice system? Where is the help for the person who is getting beaten all the time? What does it show the people when the people who do the crime don't seem to do their time like they should? Justice! I think that J.O. has suffered enough, as have her children, and that she should be able to go home and take care of her children. Long ago the guy would have had to leave the community and the community would try to help support the family.

As for the oil pipeline, I think they should aim it almost straight across from Fairbanks toward Unalakleet. Using Galena and Unalakleet as subhubs, head on up to Nome or Kotzebue. Making the pipeline go that way would help out a lot of communities through out Alaska, by way of creating much-needed jobs, and opening up other resources that might be out there!

It is a laugh that they keep letting go the wrong people, people who—if given the right training—would benefit their company, because then they'd have reliable people, instead of rehiring people who were fired because of their drinking habits or something. So there are times the other people might do double time, because they can't find subs. But the shame of it is you lose some good people and put them out of work, and the other person may get burnt out from too many double shifts.

As for the bypass mail, we already pay a lot out here in rural Alaska as it is. A lot for oil and gas ($6.30 here), a lot for groceries, and a lot to send mail (cost me $20 to send one box within the state). I would like to know how we are supposed to afford everything when there are no jobs around. Why don't the people who make such decisions move to rural Alaska for a while and see if they could afford it.

Anyway, God bless you all in this New Year. Take care.

As always, Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

program and the bill drafted by the initiative proponents.

The initiative proposes to place the program under the Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development. It used to be under the Dept. of Natural Resources. The initiative aims to bring back a board made up of 13 members, including nine public members appointed by the Governor from a list of nominations from coastal districts and four commissioners of the DNR, Dept. of Fish and Game, DEC and DCCED. Decisions would be made by the board rather than by the DNR Commissioner, as was the practice under the program from 2003 until it expired last August.

The Board's powers and duties would include reviewing and approving the regulations necessary to implement the coastal management program; initiating interagency coastal and ocean regional planning; reviewing and approving coastal district management plans; and establishing coordination among state agencies to facilitate development and implementation of the coastal program. Enforceable policies would require designated areas and "must be clear and concise, cannot address matters preempted by state or federal law, may be prescriptive or performance based and may address a matter of local concern," the initiative reads.

Previously, coastal districts had to define designated areas, impacts to coastal resources could only be considered within the designated area. The initiative proposes to not limit the provisions of the federal Coastal Zone Management Act and to allow consideration of impacts to coastal resources and uses on federal lands

Injured Stebbins man assaults VPO

By Diana Haecker

After having been a victim of an assault himself, a Stebbins man carrying a baseball bat and at least one knife walked into the Stebbins Police department office, reported that he had been be assaulted and then took a swing with the bat at Village Police Officer Algen Katcheak.

Katcheak was not hurt, and a second police officer managed to grab Milligrock from behind and subdued him.

Milligrock, 26, was arrested and charged with assault III, for causing fear of injury with a dangerous instrument. The VPO transported him to Nome and he is lodged at the Anvil Mountain Correctional Center.

However, the precursor to swinging at the VPO was that Milligrock himself had been attacked and severely injured. Alaska State Trooper Anne Sears reports that Milligrock suffered substantial injuries to his face when he was beat up by another Stebbins man in the early morning hours of Dec. 29. Milligrock had a broken nose, broken cheekbones and injuries that would be consistent with being kicked or stomped in the face.

According to Sears, the motive is unclear, but there was an altercation between Eric Milligrock and Joseph Snowball, 28. Milligrock had made homebrew and both Milligrock and Snowball were drunk. Snowball was charged with assault in the third degree for causing physical injury with a dangerous instrument and was taken to Nome's AMCC.

After Milligrock's injuries were tended to at the Norton Sound Hospital in Nome, he was interviewed by Troopers and had his first appearance in court on Friday, Dec. 30. He will be also charged with making homebrew. Snowball had his first appearance in court on Thursday, Dec. 29.

rather bridge the gap over remaining ice by coupling together lengths of 4-inch hose.

The Jones Act waiver is necessary to go against the federal law that requires ships transferring goods between American ports to be American owned, staffed and operated. The Department of Homeland Security under secretary Janet Napolitano announced the Jones Act waiver Dec. 30 in response to a request from Vitus Marine, the Alaska marine transport company managing the logistics for getting the fuel tanker into Nome to replace a lateseason failed barge shipment by Delta Marine, blocked by sea ice in mid-November.

Mark Smith, CEO and president of Vitus Marine, based his plea for the waiver on Nome's location close to Russia and the Far East making it a critical hub for national security.

Jason Evans, chairman of Bonanza Fuel's owners, Sitnasuak Native Corp., applauded the speedy approval of the waiver.

"Real thankful for all the parties that helped us get the waiver—the Coast Guard, the delegation, both senators and Don Young—they all very helpful in getting the Jones act waiver and it is very rare to get a waiver," Evans said Monday.

"This is great news for Nome residents who either faced a long, cold winter or soaring energy costs," Begich said in a statement.

Again, there is no shortage of heating fuel in Nome, according to local distributors. "This decision also recognizes Nome's key strategic position adjacent to the Bering Strait as well as the Coast Guard's need for maintained facilities to monitor our northern border," he said.

The Coast Guard has been campaigning for a new icebreaker to join the Healy, their only functioning icebreaker. City of Nome has been campaigning for a USCG base at its port for some years.

Sen. Lisa Murlowski also issued a statement.

"Today is an important step in providing certainty to the Seward Peninsula region, in terms of heat and affordable heating prices through the winter, but it is only a step. We literally have hundreds of miles to go before resolution," Murkowski said.

Affordable heating prices? Fuel for heating and vehicle travel currently runs about $6 a gallon in Nome. The cost of diesel-generated power is about 275 percent the average cost of kilowatts elsewhere in the country. Nome Joint Utility System maintains its own tank farm to fuel generators. That supply was ample, according to utility staff.

The Jones Act has been under fire recently by those who say its requirements boost the cost of shipping by ruling out lower paid foreign crews and chilling the manufacture of new ships in the costlier construction atmosphere in the United States. In 2010, Sen. John McCain introduced a bill in Congress abolishing the Jones Act.

A phone call to the Seafarers Union was not immediately returned Monday.

A second measure stood between the Renda and oil headers at Port of Nome Monday. That was approval of an amendment to Vitus Marine's emergency spill response contingency plan on file with the state Dept. of Environmental Conservation to extend the planning for cold weather conditions. An accelerated process of seven days instead of the usual 30 would allow approval after the Jan. 3 public comment deadline

Nome has no access by road, but only by sea or by air, a very expensive alternative to the usual summer fuel barge deliveries. The Renda complies with American standards, according to the application, and Rimsco, owner of the Vladivostokbased tanker carries a million dollars American in pollution insurance, according to the 103-page spill plan document. The amended plan calls on availability of spill response equipment and training possessed by local organizations—City of Nome, Bonanza Fuel, Nome Joint Utility System and Crowley Maritime—that belong to a local spill-response cooperative. Vitus Marine has made the application with the U.S. Coast Guard and Alaska Chadux - a member-funded nonprofit spill response organization—in the loop, according to Mark Smith.

If the discharge response amendment does not pass ADEC, then the tanker would continue to Nome with the 1,062,000 gallons of heating fuel obtained in Korea, but without gasoline from Dutch Harbor. Bad weather and logistics junked an earlier plan to pick up the gasoline in Japan after the stop at Korea for the low-sulfur diesel. Another fuel vendor in Nome, Crowley Petroleum Distribution, also has gasoline available at the pumps in Nome.

Delta Western has agreed to supply all the gasoline it has in storage at Dutch Harbor, according to Evans, and resupply its storage tanks with a barge load from a Cook Inlet refinery.

Fuel handling in cold weather is not new in Alaska, home of the North Slope petroleum industry on the Beaufort Sea, but this is the first marine delivery to Nome during the winter months. Local, state and federal officials have been meeting daily in teleconference to plan the delivery that has involved issues in scale from laws of four countries—Korea, Japan, Russia and United States—to practical operations like matching metric couplings to British scale couplings for delivery in Nome.

When asked what the time line for completion of phase II is, Stambaugh responded in an email exchange that the Rock Creek Mine Reclamation and Closure Plan states that Alaska Gold Company has been in discussions with Sitnasuak Native Corporation and Bering Straits Native Corporation regarding potential acquisition of the entire Rock Creek Mine site. "Phase II is part of the Reclamation and Closure Plan that the Department of Natural Resources expects to approve after the public comment period," Stambaugh wrote. "Therefore, it would be a requirement that transfers to any new owner. However, if the mine is acquired, it is expected that the new owners would submit an application for an extension of the current temporary closure period to allow time for the new owners to develop a new mine plan and start the permitting process for the new mine. This would be an entirely separate permitting exercise. If the acquisition does not occur, Alaska Gold Company anticipates the completion of Phase II by the end of 2012."

Post-closure water quality monitoring is required by both the DNR and the Department of Environmental Conservation. "Water quality monitoring is proposed to occur during active site reclamation and then in years 1, 2, 5, 10, 15, 20 and 30 of the post-closure time period," Stambaugh wrote.

The closure cost is estimated at $20 million for the proposed plan.

Stambaugh said that the seasonal nature of barge access to Nome and the need to complete the tailings facility dewatering and the construction of the tailings facility dam breach before break-up made project planning and scheduling challenging.

When asked why the comment period of review of the highly technical and detailed plan is only 15 days, Stambaugh said that the public notice is not mandatory and has been made out of courtesy. The DNR does not plan to hold a public meeting to present the closure plan and at press time it was not clear whether or not Alaska Gold Co. would hold a community meeting to lay out their plans.

Written comments must be received by 5 p.m. on January 20.

Alaska Gold Co. is a subsidiary of the Canadian company NovaGold Resources Inc. NovaGold is an upstart exploration company that hoped to transition to become a gold producer with its first project, the Rock Creek mine. The mine was ranked high in NovaGold's portfolio of projects and supposed to be a world class, showcase mine. Construction of the mine, mill complex and tailings storage facility began in 2006 and ended in 2008. During the commission phase of the mine in Oct. 2008, NovaGold made the decision to put the mine in care and maintenance status due to mechanical problems and the economic downturn. Since then, NovaGold tried to sell the mine, but didn't succeed in finding a buyer. NovaGold leadership decided that its Nome holdings including the Rock Creek mine are no longer fitting the company's portfolio of projects and to close the mine and put other Nome properties on the market.

School board authorizes hire of consultant to help out with 56'er pod

By Diana Haecker

In a special session, the Nome School Board unanimously voted to hire a special Nome Elementary School administrative assistant for $59,000 to deal with problems that arose in the 5th and 6th grade pod.

With all board members present, Nome Public Schools superintendent Mike Brawner laid out the situation and recommended to hire consultant Bruce Kleven of Anchorage, a retired educator with experience in rural Alaska. Without going into details, Brawner told the board that the 56'er pod (fifth and sixth grade) has problems with students showing disrespectful behavior and that the pod's teachers asked for administrative support. The situation came to a head around Thanksgiving and Brawner dispatched district office administrators Jon Berkeley to monitor and assist the teachers and Janeen Sullivan to assess what is going on.

Sullivan wrote recommendations including the suggestion for a short-term solution to bring in an experienced educator who could bring things back in line.

The job description of the new hire includes to lend administrative support to teachers, to add structure, to implement communications between the school and parents and to coordinate services such as Behavioral Health if needed, and to help interact in a positive manner, Brawner said.

The school board heard that an accumulation of different factors created upheaval in the 56'er pod and that the situation requires an immediate solution as school starts up again this week. The short time solution is the hire of consultant Kleven, who is also supposed to come up with recommendations and to consult NPS on long-term solution options. Kleven's contract is from Jan. 3 through May 25, 2012. The pay is $56,500 plus $1,500 for airline travels. Due to savings in insurance and savings from a fuel purchase, NPS business manager Cathi Wojtanek said that the hiring of Kleven would be feasible budget-wise.

Board member Barb Nickels said that the 56'ers lost some support when teaching aides were redirected to the Read90 program that focuses on the literacy in the younger grades. Jennifer Reader commented that she feels it's important that teachers feel supported by the administration and then asked, "Are we looking at a teacher turn-over as a result of this?" Superintendent Brawner answered, yes, there were things said along those lines. The board thanked Brawner for "taking the bull by the horns" and getting immediately on the task to search and find outside help to restore order at the 56'er pod.

The next regular school board meeting is scheduled for Jan. 10. On the agenda is an executive session to evaluate the Superintendent's performance, administrative contracts and the LED light order.

Pollock Conservation Cooperative donates $100,000 to NACTEC

Built by students, a shiny aluminum boat sits in the shop at the Northwestern Alaska Career and Technical Center in Nome, awaiting a few final touches. Representing more than just an opportunity to travel rivers, the boat and the program behind it present the region's youth the chance to gain valuable skills that could lead to job opportunities in a number of fields.

Among those potential career paths, the Pollock Conservation Cooperative would like to see the seafood industry high on the list. With a recent $100,000 donation to NACTEC, the PCC is helping to provide the training and education that will prepare students for employment in one of Alaska's most vibrant job sectors. The PCC, an arm of the At-sea Processors Association, is an industry trade group made up of companies that harvest pollock in the Bering Sea. NACTEC is a vocational training center in Nome that serves students from throughout the Norton Sound and Bering Strait region.

During a check presentation ceremony at the NACTEC Governing Board meeting Dec. 12 in Nome, NACTEC director Doug Walrath detailed how the $100,000 donation will support programs to prepare the region's students for careers in the commercial fishing industry. Walrath said students will complete the 16foot aluminum boat in the NACTEC shop and fabricate a trailer to haul it—a process that will teach welding, construction and engineering skills. The training will not be limited to high school students, Walrath said, noting that a welding simulator will be rotated throughout the region to provide welding training to both youth and adults.

Walrath also noted plans for marine safety training that will provide high school students with the skills to return to their home communities and teach safety courses to younger students. Students will be able to earn Red Cross CPR, First Aid and Automated External Defibrillators certifications.

"As a result of this funding, high school students and adults alike will receive skill-specific training in preparation for workforce entry into fisheries-related careers," Walrath said. "This funding will begin building a strong and viable program at the high school level that will expose students, from the 16 communities of this region, to at-sea, on-shore, harvesting, and corporate career pathways in fisheries related vocations."

Stephanie Madsen, executive director of the PCC and At-sea Processors Association, presented the donation on behalf of the PCC at the December 12 gathering. Madsen told the NACTEC Governing Board that the seafood industry presented a wealth of opportunity for jobs at all levels, whether it be for entry-level processors and support staff like cooks and cleaners, or more careertype jobs like engineers, cooks, mechanics, marketing or human resource specialists. "We have a goal to hire every eligible Alaskan," she said

Through a State of Alaska program designed to provide funding for vocational education, the PCC is able to direct funds toward an educational institution that would otherwise be spent on taxes. The connection between NACTEC and the PCC was established thanks to Glacier Fish Co., a PCC member and Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.'s harvesting partner. Glacier Fish Co. brought NACTEC to PCC board members' attention, some of whom were in Nome during the June North Pacific Fishery Council Meeting and had a chance to tour the NACTEC facilities. "Through NSEDC we got the opportunity to meet Doug [Walrath] and see the NACTEC program. We came away very impressed," Madsen said.

Living to regardity to make done.

Using tax credits to make donations to educational programs is not a new practice for the PCC. For approximately a dozen years the PCC has made contributions in excess of $10 million that support research and students in the realm of marine science at the University of Alaska Fairbanks and Alaska Pacific University. Madsen said the PCC's board of directors was excited that changes in the law allow for the tax credit to now apply toward vocational education programs at the high school level.

This is not the first tax credit donation to benefit NACTEC, which has previously received funding from NSEDC subsidiary Siu Alaska Corporation and Bering Straits Native Corporation.

At the December 12 ceremony, Bering Strait School Board Chairman Albert Washington welcomed the donation and the opportunities it will create. "It is going to make a world of difference," he said. "It is going to help our children in the years to come."

DONATION—BSSD board chairman Albert Washington, At-Sea Processors Association/PCC executive director Stephanie Madsen, NACTEC executive director Doug Walrath and NACTEC governing board member Bob Metcalf pose with a ceremonial check for the PCC's $100,000 donation to NACTEC on Dec. 12.

November storm declared a Federal Disaster

By Diana Haecker

On Dec. 22, President Barack Obama signed a federal disaster declaration for the winter storm that pummeled western Alaska Nov. 8 and 9. This means that state funds that have been released through the state's disaster declaration, are now beefed up by federal disaster assistance.

The federal declaration activates federal public assistance and hazard mitigation grant programs. Federal Emergency Management Agency recovery assistance is now available to the North Slope Borough, the Bering Strait Regional Educational Attendance Area, the Lower Kuskokwim REAA, the Lower Yukon REAA, and the Southwest Region REAA. "The federal declaration continues the local, state and federal collaboration that began as the storm intensified in early November," said John Madden, director of the Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management. "The Public Assistance program provides grants for governmental entities to restore or replace infrastructure and to help reimburse for debris removal and emergency protective measures. Emergency protective measures, initiated early at the local level, decreased the damage and loss in this widespread event," Madden said. Alaska Governor Sean Parnell de-

Alaska Governor Sean Parnell declared a state disaster on Dec. 5 and formally requested the federal declaration on Dec. 12.

FEMA's public assistance grants are based on a 75 percent federal, 25 percent state cost share to restore infrastructure damaged by the event to pre-disaster conditions as well as debris removal and emergency protective measures.

The Hazard Mitigation Grant Program funds projects that prevent or reduce long-term risk to life and property from natural hazards. All boroughs and REAAs, including those not affected by the West Coast Storm, are eligible to apply for the Hazard Mitigation Grant Program.

Christine Helen Bogart

Alaska resident, Christine Helen Bogart, 69, died peacefully at home in Anchorage on December 14, 2011.

A viewing was held Monday December 19, 2011 at St. Anthony's Catholic Church in Anchorage. A private burial will take place at a later date on the Burger family homestead in Clam Gulch.

Christine was born on November 30, 1942 in Iowa City, Iowa to Joseph and Regina Burger and moved to Alaska in 1970. Christine spent her life living in Nome, Kodiak, all over the Kenai Peninsula, and in Anchorage over the last 40 years. She was a member and very involved with St. Anthony's Catholic Church in Anchorage. Christine's hobbies included playing bingo, pool and singing.

Christine Helen Bogart

"She was born in the lower 48 but Alaska was her heart, Christine had a great sense of humor and loved to goof around. She was a very social, fun, loving sister, mother, and friend. Above all, she cherished her children greatly."

Christine is preceded in death by her parents Joe and Regina Burger, her sister Corrine Heider and daughter Regina.

She is survived by her sons Richard Smith and Ned Encelewski, daughters Patricia Shanks and her husband Tom, Bernadette Bishop and her husband Michael, Nedra Encelewski, Christine Encelewski, and Nichole Encelewski; her brothers Bill, Jack, Joe, Mike and Dick; sisters Tam, Kathy, Mari, and Helene as well as 12 grand-children and many friends.

A donation will be made in the Honor of Christine Helen Bogart to The Catholic Archdiocese of Anchorage. Contributions can be mailed to the care of Christine Encelewski at 1611 Elcadore Drive #1, Anchorage, Alaska 99507.

Janice Gale (Lewis) Burand

Anchorage resident, Mrs. Janice Gale (Lewis) Burand, 62, died at home in Anchorage on December 18, 2011 from natural causes.

A celebration of her life was held Wednesday, December 28, 2011 at the Anchorage Lutheran Church Pastor Ritchie officiated.

Janice was born on August 18, 1949 to Clarence Henry and Ruby Nell (Johnson) Lewis in Littlefield, Texas. She became a resident of Anchorage in June of 1998. Janice worked with the Lutheran Social Services of Alaska as an administrator for the Food Distribution Program. She was a volunteer with the Civil Air Patrol in the Cadet Program as well. She loved Fur Rondy, the Ice Sculptures and was an avid follower of Dee Dee Jonroe and the Iditarod races.

Her husband Don wrote, "Among the most significant moments in Jan's life was in May 1986 when she learned that she was to be a mom. The amount of joy that she had and shared would continue for 25 years. Nothing meant more to her than knowing our son was happy, that he had a future that was bright and that he knew true love." And her son DJ added, "She was a great mom, we will miss her."

Janice was preceded in death by her parents.

She is survived by her husband Donald Joe Burand of Anchorage, AK; son Donald Joe Burand II of Anchorage, AK; her sisters Clarice Lewis Durkee and Nancy Lewis Cannon of Arlington, TX; and her brother Michael Lewis also of Arlington, TX.

In lieu of flowers, memorial donations may be made in Jan's memory to the Lutheran Social Services of Alaska, 1303 West 33rd Ave. Anchorage, AK 99503 or to the Providence Children's Hospital C/O Jan Six, 3200 Providence Drive, Anchorage AK 99508.

Arrangements are under the direction of the Anchorage Funeral Home and Crematory.

Carl Albert Grauvogel

Carl Albert Grauvogel

Carl Grauvogel, retired Alaska Department of Fish and Game Wildlife Biologist, died unexpectedly on December 11, 2011, at his home in Palmer. He was born in Portola, California, grew up in Winnemucca, Nevada and graduated from the University of Nevada in Reno in 1965. He attended graduate school at the University of Alaska, Fairbanks, from 1965-1967. Following his tenure in graduate school he honorably served his country as a Lieutenant in the US Army, including a tour in Vietnam.

After his military service he returned to Alaska, where he began his 20-year career as a dedicated State Wildlife Biologist. During his career he was responsible for managing wildlife resources from the Nome Office for the entire Seward Peninsula. He was instrumental in re-introducing musk ox to the area. After working in Nome for 15 years he finished his career as a Supervisory Area Biologist in Palmer. He was honored to receive the State of Alaska Biologist of the Year Award for 1989 for his work to help enhance moose survival during the previous winter, which was marked by heavy snowfall.

He was a cherished and loving father, teacher of life skills, bush pilot, hunter, basketball, soccer and little league coach, scientist, commercial fisherman, consummate fly fisherman, friend to everyone, loving brother, and a dearly beloved husband, who will be missed by all.

He is survived by his wife of 39 years, Laura, sons and daughters-in law, Zachary, Eric and Lori, Alex (Bo) and Nathalia, of Anchorage; brothers Dean (wife Janet) Grauvogel, Lyle (wife Karen) Damon of Reno, Nevada and Larry Damon of El Cerrito, California; along with many nieces, nephews, grand nieces and nephew; his many life-long friends and his constant companion "Jazzy" who always provided her unconditional love, affection and her well known bird retrieving skills.

Service was Saturday, December 17, at St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church in Palmer, followed by a reception at the church. Interment was at Fort Richardson National Cemetery on Monday, December 19.

Janice "Jan" Rule Haynes

Palmer resident Janice "Jan" Rule Haynes, 81, died peacefully December 25, 2011, surrounded by her loving family. A Celebration of Life was held at the family farm December 28.

Jan was born in Ashland, Ohio, and moved to Perrysville Ohio where she graduated from Perrysville High School. Jan was employed by the Ohio State College of Dentistry as a histology technician in dental research from 1964-1978.

Jan longed to travel, and in 1977 moved to Nome to join adventurous relatives from Ohio. She worked for Alaska General Contractors as a bull cook, and then became a Corrections Officer for the Nome facility until 1984.

In 1981 she married Fred Haynes, a colonel with the Alaska National Guard, and moved out of town to their cabin on the Nome River. Being a true Alaskan she hauled water from the river by sled, read by propane lights, and traveled back and forth to Nome on snowmachine through the winter months when the roads were drifted in.

In 1986, Col. Haynes was transferred from Nome to Anchorage and they moved to Palmer to be closer to her daughter's young family. Following Fred's retirement in 1999 they moved to Hawaii. In 2001 they purchased a large motor home and spent four very happy years traveling the lower 48 visiting and sharing her enthusiasm for life with friends, family, and the hundreds of people she met along the way.

Between trips Jan and Fred returned to their beloved cabin on the Nome River where they quietly enjoyed reading, organizing family photographs and just being together with one another.

Jan is survived by her daughter Tammy Moser and son-in-law Mike Moser of Palmer, daughter in-law Teresa Cleveland also of Palmer and grandchildren Aaron Rule and Rachael Tyree of Palmer, Mariah Moser of Ashland Oregon, and Molly and Daisy Moser of Palmer. Her brother, James Carr, lives in Perrysville, Ohio. Jan was preceded in death by her husband, Fred Haynes, son Jim Rule, and sister Joyce Carr.

Her family writes: "Jan never knew a stranger, and her genuine loving spirit was felt by all." There will be a second Celebration of Life this summer in Nome, date to be announced.

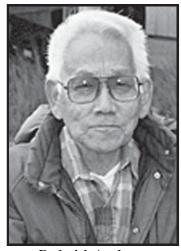

Roderick Analugzraq Seetomona

Roderick Analugzraq Seetomona, Uncle Rod, was born in Shishmaref on January 21, 1934 to Jimmy and Mary Seetomona. He died November 10, 2011, surrounded by his family.

Rod was nine years old when he got tuberculosis and was sent to a hospital in Seattle. He could not understand the doctors and nurses when he first arrived because they only spoke English and he spoke Inupiaq. When he was a teenager, he was moved to the hospital at Mt. Edgecumbe in Sitka. He often told stories and reminisced about the friends of the region and state that he made while in the hospitals.

After high school, he worked in Fairbanks at Ralph Perdue's jewelry shop, primarily making gold watches and jewelry. He liked telling stories of those days and how it started him with ivory carving and etching. Uncle Rod made beautiful, detailed carvings out of ivory, featuring animals, hunting and even adding colored ink in his etchings. He also taught carving for a while at the school in Shishmaref, and his students expressed an appreciation for his teaching. Many are successful carvers today.

Uncle Rod was 17 years old when he first came home to Shishmaref. He was no longer familiar with the language, foods, or everyday practices of life in the village. His mother was very helpful and patient during this time. She taught him to make snares, hunt, get wood, and readjust to Eskimo life.

Uncle Rod really enjoyed the outdoors, whenever he was able. He often took his family and friends boating. He especially enjoyed camping, and really missed it when it became too hard for him to get around. He always went to the racks during ugruk season. He would make sure all the ulus were sharpened and make tables and work benches when he saw a need.

Not only did he enjoy the outdoors, he liked attending community activities: ball games, foot races, dog mushing, church, feasts, Eskimo dancing and anything else that would come up. He would always have his camera and took pictures of many people and events throughout his life. He created scrapbooks with newspaper and magazine clippings of people and whatever interested him around the state. Uncle Rod was an avid reader. He read the newspaper, all kinds of magazines, books, the Bible and devotional books, and especially enjoyed stories about angels and true stories from Alaska.

Uncle Rod really knew how to take good care of his stuff. He made everything last a real long time, but he also enjoyed new technology. He ordered a CD player to listen to Gospel music and Hank Williams. Uncle Rod still had a rotary telephone hanging on his wall, which he used to call people when a good boxing match was coming up, but he did not want a senior citizen cell phone. He missed his Motorola Razor.

When he was able, he enjoyed visit-

When he was able, he enjoyed visiting family and friends in their homes. As it got harder to get around, he was even more appreciative of the people who came to visit him. Uncle Rod always had a story to share from the old days. When he had to rely on the help of others, he would always have to give in return, never allowing them to leave without something. He was always generous, ordering special gifts for every birthday and Christmas, and labeling them with his easily recognized handwriting. He was a quiet, gentle, kind man who will be greatly missed by the many people who knew him as Uncle

Uncle Rod is survived by his sister Willa Seetomona, nephews and nieces John and Minnie Sinnok, Rachel and Richard Stasenko, Jimmy Seetomona, Carol and Alfred Ningeulook, Coolidge, Steve and Arlene, Lorena and Marilyn Seetomona, Elmer Avessuk, Harriet and Everett Cutshall. He had numerous great nephews/nieces, great-great-nieces/nephews, cousins and friends.

He is preceded in death by his parents Jimmy and Mary Seetomona, sisters: Loretta Sinnok and William, Jane Seetomona, brother: Tommy Seetomona and Glenna, and five siblings who died young, before he was born; nephews: Ralph Sinnok, Raymond, Max and Charlie Seetomona, nieces: Eda and Kiatcha Seetomona.

Under the previous rule, outer continental shelf activities may have been reviewed for consistency with the state's ACMP, but impacts to coastal resources and uses in OCS areas could not be considered because of the designated area requirements. The initiative proposes that activities in the OCS may be reviewed for consistency with the ACMP. The bill would establish objectives for the coastal management program that address the use, management, restoration, enhancement, development, and protection of the coastal environment; coordination among government agencies and citizens; and public and government participation in development and implementation of the coastal management program. The objectives also include the requirement that state resource agencies act in accordance with the coastal program.

Nanook Boys get better and better

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome-Beltz High School boys basketball team competed this past weekend in Anchorage for the ACS Invitational where they claimed 4th place in the tournament by winning two out of the three games they played. Even finishing 4th place in the tournament, it proved to be a place that excited a lot of people about what this team has in store for the season.

In the first day of the tournament, it looked like it may be a short time playing in the tournament for the boys as they lost their first round game to Thunder Mountain, 44-41. Nathan Blandford led the way for the Nanooks with 17 points, but it was the inability of the offense to score that proved fatal for the Nanooks.

In the next day's game the Nanooks seemed to look like a whole new team. Nome came out firing and was able to defeat conference rival Bethel, 58-51. Nome, who led for most of the game eventually lost the lead in the last stages of the game, but in the end were able to make a run in the fourth quarter that proved too much for the Bethel Warriors. The offense was really dominated by two players for the Nanooks as Nathan Blandford and Tyler Eide combined for 45 of the Nanook's 58 points scored in the contest.

The next day the Nanooks had a chance to finish their tournament run with a victory against the Skyview Panthers. The Nanooks did just that and in a big way. The Nanooks won the game 51-34 with a great defensive effort and an all-around good scoring day as three different players ended up in double figures. Another big key was the improved play of sophomore center Cass Mattheis and freshman forward Daniel Head as they did a great job grabbing rebounds and blocking shots.

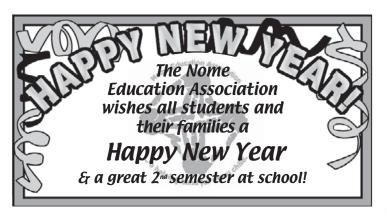

It was a great sign to see the improvement of each game with the Nanook boys throughout the tournament and it will be something to build on as they play more games down the road this season.

The question of the boys team this year has been the youth and inexperience of the team. It was this youth that made the last two wins that much more impressive as it would have been easy for a young team to pack it in after losing their first game in the tough way that they did. Head coach Pat Callahan was able to will his team to those victories over the weekend to what became a 4th place finish.

The boys team, which seems to be getting better all around each game will look to continue their success as they head to Galena for two games this Friday and Saturday.

Lady Nanooks display solid showing at ACS Invitational

By Stephen PalmatierThe Nome-Beltz High School Lady Nanooks basketball squad came out of the ACS Invitational held in Anchorage with their heads held high, finishing in third place in the tournament winning two of their three games played.

In what was a very up-and-down tournament for the Lady Nanooks, it started off strong with a dominating performance in the first round as they rolled over South Anchorage, winning 65-34. The story of the game was not only the tremendous defense holding South Anchorage to 34 points, but also the terrific play of guard Dylan Johnson as she led all scorers with a game high 29 points. The Lady Nanooks, who led by 20 points at halftime, showed throughout the game that they were simply too much for South Anchorage to

The next day, the ladies moved on to a much stiffer opponent in the Barrow Whalers. Nome and Barrow, who were very familiar with one another, played a very tough, defensive game in which Barrow came out on top, 38-29 ending the Lady Nanooks' chances of making a championship run in the tournament. The story of this game was the inability for the Lady Nanooks to produce any offense as Dylan Johnson once again led the Nanook scorers with only 9 points. Devynn Johnson added an additional 6 points. The Lady Nanooks, who have a lot of size this year, had used that to their advantage for most of the season so far. However, Barrow's size was just as great and was obviously something that the Nanooks had not seen before. The Lady Nanooks had trouble scoring in the interior and simply could not get anything going on offense as the size of Barrow was simply too much for them. The Lady Nanooks, who again played great defense in the game, can look back on this one as to what may have been if they could have had just a little more offense.

In the third and final day, the Nome ladies faced Valdez for the consolation championship game. After losing the previous day, it was interesting to see what motivation the ladies would come out with, but they showed a lot to people as they defeated Valdez, 57-52 making them take home the third place finish. The game, which was tied at halftime looked to be in the hands of Valdez after three quarters as they were able to jump out to a 9 point lead against the Lady Nanooks after three quarters. However, the Lady Nanooks came back strong in the fourth quarter, perhaps playing their most complete quarter of the year as they outscored Valdez by 14 points in the quarter enroute to their 5 point victory. Dylan Johnson, for the third straight game led the Lady Nanooks with 19 points and Devynn Johnson added 17 points as well.

The third place finish, though disappointing is also something that the Lady Nanooks can take with them for the remainder of the season as things they did well and things they can improve. They look to improve on things when they play their next games Friday and Saturday night at home against Galena.

Peace on Earth

"Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace to those on whom his favor rests."(Luke 2:14) Two thousand years ago, shepherds were amazed at the message of the angels announcing the birth of Christ, the Prince of Peace. Christmas and the New Year remind us of the ever present need to constantly work toward lasting peace in our troubled world. But how can we turn that reminder and our desire for peace into reality?

Truth will build peace if people work in solidarity to let the truth be known. Communism, which denied the existence of God and suppressed the true rights of workers, collapsed under the weight of its own lies but only after long, long decades of tyranny. A critical crack in the iron curtain came from workers in Polish shipyards who stood up for their rights while millions stood in solidarity with them. Over time and with peaceful support, the crack that began in Poland spread throughout the Soviet Union.

Justice will build peace if in practice everyone respects the rights of others and actually fulfills his duties towards them. South Africa freed itself from the tyranny of Apartheid when justice was respected for both white and black cultures. Restorative justice was possible because victims of gross human rights violations were invited to testify about their experiences in public hearings. Perpetrators of violence were also given the opportunity to apologize and seek forgiveness.

Charity will build peace if it is fueled by love. Mother Teresa, totally in love with Jesus, brought the spirit and mission of charity to the streets of Calcutta. The mind and spirit she brought to her work can be summed as follows: Love Jesus generously. Love Him trustfully without looking back, without fear. Give yourself fully to Jesus. Desire to love much and love the love that is not loved.

Freedom will build peace and make it thrive if people act according to reason and respect the freedom of others. The seeds of freedom sewn in the Declaration of Independence took hundreds of years to blossom for African Americans. Peaceful change came to the segregated south through the Civil Rights Movement. People caught the spirit of freedom from the dreams of Martin Luther King who offered hope in the face of injustice.

In our lifetimes, the world has made great strides for peace and yet we seem to be a world still on the verge of war. Progress towards peace in 2011 seemed awfully fragile as much of it was countered by violence and repression that still tried to hold on to power in the face of massive protests for the old order to give way.

Despite its fragility, peace is possible when it is founded on truth, built according to justice, enlivened by charity, and hope allows freedom to blossom. May the beginning of this New Year and the hope that rises spontaneously from the depths of all our hearts encourage each of us to work for peace in our lives and in our world.

with cancer vaccines are living cancer-free for months, even years, beyond the expected life expectancy of people undergoing standard therapy for notoriously deadly cancers like pancreatic cancer or metastatic breast cancer.

Like present-day vaccines for infectious diseases, cancer vaccines are designed to stimulate the immune system to attack abnormal cells. The cancer vaccines contain proteins called antigens, which activate the body's immune system to produce special white blood cells that detect and destroy specific malignant can-

Like skillful hunters, activated white blood cells spread throughout the body tracking down and consuming any cancer cell that bears the same antigen as the vaccine.

In the future, treatment of cancer may be as straightforward as getting a shot for strep throat, and prevention of cancer may become a routine part of childhood immunizations.

At this point, the US Food and Drug Administration has approved three vaccines known to prevent cancer by preventing viral infections that cause cancer. Two of the approved vaccines prevent infection with the human papilloma virus (HPV) thereby preventing development of cervical and rectal cancer. The other approved vaccine prevents liver cancer by preventing hepatitis B infections that are known to be associated with hepatocellular carcinoma of the

These vaccines are used to prevent cancer. But the FDA has also approved one vaccine to treat cancer after it has developed. The vaccine is approved for use in men with active metastatic prostate cancer. The vaccine, called sipuleucel-T (Provenge), costs nearly $100,000 and extends life by an average of four months.

Though experts debate whether the cost of Provenge is worth the benefit, the very approval of such a vaccine represents a significant transition in thinking about cancer treatment. Currently, cancer is treated with therapies like chemotherapy and radiation that weaken the immune system as an unwanted side ef-Cancer vaccines, on the contrary, are designed to turn the immune system on, in effect treating cancer at the microscopic level by killing one cancer cell at a time.

Vaccines were a primary contributor to the increase in life expectancy during the last century, largely by eradicating epidemics of feared infectious diseases like polio, small pox, pertussis, and diphtheria. It is exciting to think that vaccines, using the same principles of immunotherapy, may provide a cure for the most feared cancers of our time.

PUBLIC NOTICE – ROCK CREEK MINE Draft State Decision

The Rock Creek Mine consists of a mine/mill complex six miles north of Nome. Alaska Gold Company (AGC) constructed and operated the mine between 2006 and 2008. In 2008, 100,000 tons of ore were milled and the tailings deposited in the tailings storage facility (TSF). Since 2008, the mine has been in care and maintenance status with on-going water treatment and discharge, stormwater management, and monitoring. AGC has submitted a two-phase Final Reclamation and Closure Plan for the mine.

Phase I consists of removing water from the TSF, installing a temporary synthetic cover on the tailings and breaching the TSF dam. Phase I will be completed in February and March 2012.

Phase II consists of: removing the tailings from the TSF; disposing of tailings, ore and waste rock in the Main Pit; backfilling of Main Pit to eliminate potential for surface water accumulation; dismantling and disposal of mill facilities and other buildings; removal of all equipment and supplies; recontouring, placing top soil, and applying seed and fertilizer to the site; and, implementing post-closure monitoring.

On January 5, 2012 the State of Alaska is releasing the following documents for a 15-day public review and comment period:

- Rock Creek Mine Reclamation and Closure Plan
- Rock Creek Mine Revised Closure Cost Estimate

Got gas? Russian tanker following icebreaker with new supply

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Russian fuel tanker Renda was making up time Monday after sea ice ridges, weather conditions, and human fatigue slowed its progress following the USCG ice breaker Healy to Nome over the weekend with 1.4 million gallons of vehicle fuel to take up slack for a failed fall fuel delivery to Bonanza Fuel, one of the community's two fuel distributors.

Without the delivery, the community could feel the pinch at the pumps while gas prices, already near $6, could shoot into the ozone, but stop short of the media-propagated $9 a gallon, according to Jason class tanker Renda and the Healy made better time Monday, according to Mark Smith, CEO of Vitus Marine, the company that has contracted the Renda and her crew for this project. The Renda's position Monday afternoon put it about 110 miles short of reaching Nome, according to Smith. According to USCG releases, the caravan advanced only 15 miles Saturday and 17 miles Sunday, encountering ice two to three feet thick along the route in the vicinity of Hooper Bay. The tanker became stuck several times, pressured by ice in the breakthrough operation, and had to be freed again by the Healy, according to a USCG news release. Based on

Evans, executive with the Sitnasuak Native Corp. that owns Bonanza. Nome has enough heating fuel for the winter where temperatures had warmed Monday from the - 30°F range to a balmy -7°F, but did not encouraging pedestrian travel. A shortage of gasoline could park some cars this winter.

erators expect ice to thicken to three to four feet close to Nome—a slab that is not too tough for the Renda, according to owners.

Excitement over the arctic journey has grown in the news industry. Pending the Renda's arrival and beginning of offloading activities, slated for Jan. 10, but not likely that soon, out-of-town press people wrapped their legs around bar stools or kept elbows on café tables waiting to harvest quotations and images to flesh out a good story, many times reported already with few variations. The media consensus has been that the City of Nome contracted a lifesaving delivery of the city's entire winter fuel supply that was shut out by a dramatic November storm with

Nome in long deep freeze

By Diana Haecker

It's one of those months when every conversation in Nome starts with "are your drains working?" and ends with "Stay warm!"

Since December 28, there has not been a single day when the low temperature didn't hit -30°F or warmer. Going through a normal routine in life becomes challenging in those temperatures. Cars don't start. Sewer vents plug and render houses smelling not exactly like roses. Heaters and fuel lines plug, leaving homes cold and lead to frozen pipes. A normal office day at -30°F begins with the chore of firing up that hair dryer to thaw out the toilet.

Plumbers in town are so busy that they don't even return phone calls to say how many rescue missions they were on. Louie Green, Sr. worked on more frozen pipes more than he cared to and muttered during one house call, "I'm supposed to be retired, but what can you do?"

thred, but what can you do?"

The Nome post of the National Weather Service reported that Nome reached a temperature of -40°F for the first time in almost 13 years on Thursday, January 5. The last time Nome recorded -40°F without wind-chill was on February 1, 1999. Bob Ten Eyck, meteorologist with the NWS in Nome said the low on Sunday still recorded a -30°F, making it 12 consecutive days of the 30-below-cold-snap. He said that the normal temperature for January is 13°F and the normal low is -3°F

On New Years' Eve, droves of people – more or less dressed for the -32°F – converged on Middle Beach to look at the New Year's fireworks but the rockets didn't make it high over the horizon due to the cold air. It was a splendid display regardless.

Nome Police Department Sgt. Preston Stotts said he had nothing much to report in terms of cold related incidents. Eleven volunteers with the Safety Patrol helped out the four police officers with their presence in town for New Year celebrations. The Nome Emergency Shelter NEST has been open since Nov. 15 and despite the record-breaking cold temperatures, shelter manager Bonnie Hahn said she was surprised to see no more than 16 guests coming to NEST at the Karmun Christian Center. Hahn said the shelter is open from 9 p.m. to 9 a.m. and has an average of 10 to 11 guest per night. Shoni Evans, the shelter's chef, brings in a hot pot of soup, chowder or stew every night to feed the guests. Seeking relief from the bitter cold outside, the homeless guests are having dinner, then read or talk and

Dear Editor,

I am a retired seismic surveyor, who was silly enough to go to the Canadian High Arctic, on Banks Island, Ellef Ringness Island, and on the ice more than one winter working season.

Your story about the fuel problems, and on the solution, is excellent — all the details, but without all the glittering generalities, and without all the naked assertions, that stories in the Legacy Media, both print and electronic, often display. Grin.

The story about the closure of the shutdown gold mine is also very, very good.

I have been involved in both writing, and in fulfilling environmental remediation plans, for seismic jobs, and can well imagine the complexity of doing that work in an area so far north that getting a good grass catch is very difficult.

Regards, Neil Frandsen Lethbridge, Alberta, Canada.

Dear Nancy,

Greetings to you all whom are able to sit and read. This is Howard Jr. writing from Unalakleet. I want to take this time to wish you all a Happy New Year 2012 and a safe sober one.

The main reason I've decided to write is to thank you all in Nome for all the help you have given Ellen while she resided in the area for four plus years. You know who you all are, so I'm not going to waste time and name you all. Thank you to the Nome Covenant Church Pastor Harvey, Lloyd, Chris for all your help with bringing boxes, apes and just showing her Christ like love to her.

Ephesians Chapter 6 says: Children obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right. Honor they father and mother, which is the first commandment with promise; that it may go well with thee, and thou mayest love long on the earth. "KJV."

As we all grow older I hope and pray, as Christians are becoming lukewarm in this present evil age, that we will pray for revival first in our own hearts and that it will spread like wild fire across our state. We don't need divisions in our churches we all belong to the body of Christ.

I want to thank God for sending that "Eskimo" from Sweden almost 125 years ago an A.E. Karlson

Happy New Year everyone. I hope all went well for you and your families in 2011 and that 2012 treats you even better. Well, with the holidays over it's now my least favorite time of year - Time to pack for Juneau. Most of what we can expect this year was covered in my previous newsletter. There are some updates in oil taxes and ACMP to address and the Governor's proposed budget has rolled out.

The Governors Capital and Operating budgets came out last month. It will be difficult to say exactly what this budget does and what the real numbers are until we get into the budget subcommittee and hear from departments but I'll give you a brief overview of what I see in the Governor's request. According to the Office of Budget and Management Operating budget is currently weighs in at $11,058,018,900 which is up $88,985,000 (or 0.8 percent) from last year. While this is a lowest increase in recent history it also is only the first step in the budgeting process. The Governor has more or less ac-

"Stay Warm"

While the rest of the nation complains of unseasonably warm temperatures, Nome and the communities of Northwestern Alaska have been hammered with the deepest chill we have seen in the last 10 years. Old codgers are remembering back in the '70s and '80s when it was in the -60s°F and that's without the wind chill.

It's the time of the year when we really appreciate R-values and the efforts and skills of our plumbing and heating specialists. We hone our skills with hair driers on frozen pipes and can say "hoar frost" without blushing. We fear that polar bears are roaming the ice packs on our frozen toilets. We marvel at the icicles on our chimneystacks. We re-teach ourselves how to drive when we can't see through the curtain of exhaust that envelopes our trucks. We are thankful for head bolt heaters and remote starters and are confident that our friends in the south haven't the foggiest idea what we're talking about. Speaking of fog, some folks insist there is no such thing as ice fog. What do they know! They laugh when we tell them it was so cold that our New Years fireworks stayed low because they could not skyrocket above the layer of cold air hanging over our town.

In spite of the January chill the warmth of our town is inspirational. Folks are bundled in their L.L.Bean and Eddie Bauer high fashion with their 40 below fur hats and faces wrapped in ruffs and wool scarves, yet they still have time to give that Alaskan greeting— "Stay Warm!" —N.L.M.—

North in Alaska

Sing to the tune of "North to Alaska" By Cussy Kauer Nome, AK

Way up North, (North in Alaska) Way up North, (North in Alaska) North in Alaska They're going North, the place is Nome North in Alaska They're going North, the place is Nome.

Big Sam said to Putin in the year 2-0-1-2, Our Coast Guard Cutter Healy will help your tanker Renda bust through They'll cross through the Aleutians, and find their way alone Bringing fuel to Seward Peninsula, to a place whose name is Nome

They crossed the majestic ocean, which was frozen like a stone They busted through ice mountains, as they crushed their way to Nome With the northern lights a running wild and the temps -32° Cutter Healy and the Renda, two mighty ships in 2-0-1-2

So children won't be freezing It's fuel they are needing North in Alaska They're pushing North, the place is Nome

Way up North, (North in Alaska) Way up North, (North in Alaska) North in Alaska They're going North, the place is Nome North in Alaska They're going North, the place is Nome

Joy turned to Scott with the bill in her hand Said: Scott you're a very lucky, lucky man I prayed for a month this would go according to plan Not one small drop of fuel got spilled on the City of Nome's land

Cause the town needed fuel to get through wintertime Remember, Mother Nature beat us, last November 9 That storm we did weather, and now snug in our home Thank you to the Coasties from all of us in Nome whose bones are waiting for the trumpet sound. A big thanks you to the Unalakleet Covenant Women's Sewing Circle for their perseverance in their annual auction.

So children won't be freezing It's fuel they are needing North in Alaska They're pushing North, the place is Nome North in Alaska They're pushing North, the place is Nome

Thanksgiving is due to what I like to think of them as the Billy Grahams of the North. Rev. Curtis Ivanoff, Byron Bruckner and Adam London, as they continue on serving our risen Lord. My prayers are with you all as you morn: the Johnson family, the Emma Ivanoffs and most recently the Oyoumicks. God is our refuge and strength and even present help in trouble. We as humans mourn differently, some of us turn to strong drink, which we feel dulls the pain. From my own time it took myself over 14 years to finally get over questioning God on our mourning process.

It's import to talk with someone and not bottle up your feelings inside before we do something we will have to live with (my own blunder), but you know God forgives just as he did to King David.

You see God loved us so much that his own son was the worst criminal in the world when he hung on the cross. I wonder sometimes if Jesus were to come into our worship services and would ask us the question he asked the rich young man if we are able to sell everything we have then come and follow him. In this world we have a lot of lonely men, women who are seeking a listening ear.

May we as Christians make it a point to go visit, invite someone we don't give a "rats ass" about and show them what were all about.

This know also, that in the last days perilous time shall come II Timothy 3:1 KJV. Well this is not my sermon on the mount.

Once again thank you Nancy for publishing this short letter from 'Ibiona" my Inupiat name. Greetings to Elaine in Wisconsin if she still is living and to the Harris' of Galena, Bonllis in Texas and all my aunts, uncles, scattered all over like "lice" and a congratulatory to Alvin and Agnes Ivanoff of Kotzebue on their 50+ years together.

God bless you all real good. Sincerely, Howard I. Slwooko, Jr. Unalakleet, AK Council confab changes from after work to after supper

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council will continue to meet on second and fourth Mondays but has changed the gavel time from 5:30 p.m. back to its traditional time of 7:30p.m.

Councilman Stan Andersen noted that people have kids and need to eat at the earlier meeting time.

"This is convenient for some people, but not the public," Andersen observed.

In other kid business, the Council unanimously adopted an ordinance leasing property at the Gold Hill Tutit Ininat Child Care Building to Kawerak, Inc. to house a play and learn center and Head Start programs.

The Council unanimously passed a resolution authorizing City Manager Josie Bahnke to enter an agreement with architects ECI/Hyer, Inc., to design the $16-million Richard Foster Building. This means the firm will tackle the task of programming, site selection and concept design on a time-and-materials basis not to exceed $105,000. This task is one of five design projects that will be developed for the building, each one to be presented to the Council for consideration and approval. A principle of the firm, Terry Hyer, has worked with the Museum and Library Commission for years as a consultant on a new facility.

As to the Museum and Library Commission, the Council threw out a measure amending the City's Code of Ordinances to add a new section concerning qualifications for appointment to the panel. A document found in the City files confused the issues on composition of the advisory group.

"The idea is to vote it down and start over," Andersen told the Council. They did, unanimously.

In new business, the Council unanimously passed a resolution continuing the services of Appraisal Company of Alaska for ad valorem tax services for years 2012, 2013 and 2014.

"Did you go out to bid?" Councilman Jerald Brown asked the City staff. They did not. City Clerk Vanessa Musich said the staff was satisfied with the firm's work. The contract is worth $76,000 for the three years. Work will start with a reassessment of all properties within the City during 2013.

The Council also unanimously passed a resolution continuing services of Bristol Engineering Services Corp. as acting city engineer in the person of John Blees, senior engineer. BESC has had a contract with the City for acting engineer since 2003. Compensation will be billed according to labor categories at hourly rates. The hourly for senior engineer ranges from $135 to $170.

In other business with Kawerak, Inc. the Council approved a fee waiver request from the organization for use of the Recreational Center for the week April 23-27 for the Kawerak Regional conference. Value of the waiver is $6,000. Near the end of the meeting, Andersen said organizations that received waivers on public facility rentals should pay some costs for employees and materials.

"I don't think the public should foot the bill." he said

Finally, under new business, the Council unanimously approved fee increases for use of the City's two popular facilities, the Nome Recreation Center and the swimming pool.

Representatives from the U.S. Coast Guard, state Dept of Environmental Conservation and Vitus Marine, in town to facilitate the fuel delivery from a Russian tanker following the USCG icebreaker Healy to Nome met the council and were available for questions.

In her city manager's report, Josie Bahnke informed the Council that the state Department of Transportation had an offer on the table to pay $318,500 for City property the state needs in order to relocate the Snake River Bridge. Some questions needed to be answered and the city appraiser needed to look over the issue, after which the offer would come to the Council for a formal review and approval, Bahnke said.

Bahnke is also working on a lease agreement for the Norton Sound Health Corp. to use the city's snow removal equipment building from June through October 2012 when the space is typically vacant to store equipment for the new hospital. An ordinance on the issue would come before the Council soon, Bahnke said.

Relative to snow, Bahnke informed the Council that a policy needed to be developed to discourage piling snow removed from private property in the public right-of-way.

Personnel changes included the resignation of Zane Brown as a Nome Police Department dispatcher and the hire of a new deputy city clerk, Thomas Moran, who was moving to Nome from Massachusetts, Musich told the Council. There were local applicants, but Moran who had attended law school and had experienced working in a tax assessor's office was the most qualified, she said.

In his utility manager's report, John Handeland urged Nome Joint Utility System customers to register for the $500 energy assistance grant from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. This opportunity will begin in Council chambers at Nome City Hall Feb. 2 - 4 from 8 a.m. to 8.p.m. then continue to be available at the NJUS office. NJUS will try to apply the assistance to February bills, he said. Account holders need to bring a utility bill and a piece of identification. There will be a provision for renters.

Additionally, Handeland offered the utility's assistance in the upcoming vehicle fuel delivery.

Rock Creek mine closure may not be final

BSNC takes lead in effort to acquire Rock Creek mine buildings

By Diana Haecker

While regulators with the state of Alaska have issued a draft closure and reclamation plan for the Rock Creek mine, which is now out for public comment, permanent closure is not for certain. The Rock Creek reclamation plan submitted by Alaska Gold to the Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources states that AGC has been in discussions with Sitnasuak Native Corporation and Bering Straits Native Corporation regarding potential acquisition of the entire Rock Creek Mine site.

The document says that SNC owns a portion of the surface land at the site, while BSNC owns a portion of the mineral rights. "If the acquisition is completed, BSNC and SNC are expected to work towards reopening the mine under a new mine plan. Phase 2 of the closure plan would only be conducted if the acquisition does not occur," reads the document. Phase 1 consists of covering the tailings and breaching the tailings facility dam after as much ponded water as possible is treated and discharged or injected. AGC hopes to complete the first phase prior to 2012 break-up. This will be done regardless of the ownership status of the property.

Bering Straits Native Corporation took the lead in conversations with Alaska Gold Company, the owner and operator of the Rock Creek mine, in regards to the transfer of the buildings and infrastructure at the mine and mill site. Gail Schubert, BSNC's president and CEO confirmed that there are ongoing talks with NovaGold Resources Inc. but that nothing is set in stone at this point in time. "We are talking not about a sale but the transfer of the assets to us," Schubert told The Nome Number

She explained that much of the infrastructure, the mill complex and several other buildings are built on the Sitnasuak Native Corporation's surface and BSNC's subsurface estates. As landowners the Native corporations have reviewed and agreed on the proposed reclamation plan, but also have discussed an alternative outcome. "BSNC is also looking at the possibility of reopening the mine, rather than having all of the infrastructure dismantled," said Schubert.

BSNC's advisor Harry Noah, a former Dept. of Natural Resources commissioner and mine expert, has prior experience in successfully taking over the operations of a closed mine and making it work, Schubert said. BSNC is having a cost-benefit analysis prepared for making the mill complex operational using a gravity-based method.

"We are looking at the cost of what it would take to get the mine going," Schubert said.

Sitnasuak Native Corp. CEO David Hoffman also confirmed that there are talks with NovaGold regarding taking over the mine's processing mill and other assets, but that SNC is not actively pursuing the issue. "BSNC is taking the lead on that," Hoffman said. "Sitnasuak would love to see the mine operate, and as surface land owners we are involved, but we've not taking any steps to participate in any action to become a co-owner of a mine," Hoffman said.

Hoffman said that every party—the mine's owners, the state and the Native corporations—have agreed to go forward with Phase I of the reclamation plan, to breach the tailing facility's dam. If in any event the mine will be transferred to new ownership, the new owner would either go forward with Phase II or submit a new mining plan and permit applications. At this point, it is still undetermined if NovaGold will close the mine as outlined in the draft closure and reclamation plan or if BSNC is successful in taking over the mine.

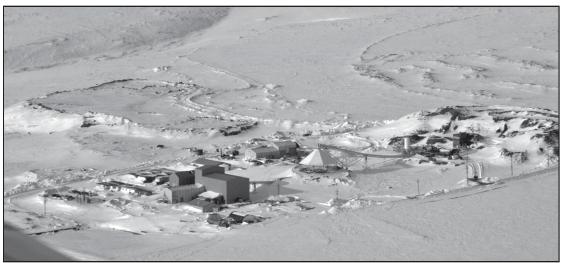

NovaGold Resources vice president for Environment, Health, Safety and Sustainability Ron Rimelman said in an email that "details of any discussions NovaGold has had with Bering Straits and Sitnasuak Native corporations regarding the Rock Creek Mine are subject to strict confidentiality agreements."

DNR's draft reclamation plan approval allows for a 'temporary closure', meaning suspension of reclamation operations, but if such temporary closure goes on for more than three years, DNR may enforce final reclamation.

The DNR last week submitted the draft reclamation plan approval to the public. Alaska Gold Co. formulated a Rock Creek mine reclamation and closure plan to regulators in Oct. 2011, which represents the "permanent cessation or abandonment of mining and milling operations at the Rock Creek mine. DNR outlines that the reclamation is complete when all terms of the plan have been met, when there is no longer active water treatment required and a stable vegetative cover has been established. The plan says that a total initial financial assurance amount of $20,272,000 has been approved for the mine.

Phase 2 of the reclamation plan entails the restoration of the 420 acres of land disturbed by mining-related activities to a near natural condition. The plan also says that the site after reclamation should not pose any long-term risk to the people or surrounding environment. At closure, virtually the entire site, except for selected roads, is supposed to be reclaimed and revegetated.

The public comment period ends on January 20, and written comments need to be submitted by mail, fax or email to Steve McCroarty, ADNR/Mining, Land and Water, 3700 Airport Way, Fairbanks, AK 99709-4699, Fax: (907) 451-2703, email: steve.mcgroarty@alaska.gov

Vessel for sale

To be sold As-is / Where-is

Vessel: M/V Hwaka

Location: Grounded near seafood plant in Unalakleet, Alaska

Dimensions: 128′ x 23′ x 14′ • Hull Construction: Steel

Vessel Type: Freezer barge, converted from a WWII Navy ship

The Hwaka is a shallow-drafting, unpowered freezer barge currently owned by Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. (NSEDC) and located in Unalakleet, Alaska.

NSEDC is soliciting offers for the Hwaka as-is, where-is. Buyer must remove the vessel from its current location.

The Hwaka has a stable platform and a crane onboard. It has three operational Detroit Diesel engines: one is a power plant, the other two are for the refrigeration system. The vessel has many refrigeration and mechanical systems in varying states of operability.

The vessel needs a new house on the top deck (the current structure is made of plywood), which serves as the packing area. The rest of the structure is steel and is in good condition.

For further information on the vessel, please contact Reese Huhta (reese@nsedc.com or 907-625-1660) or Frank Doty (frankd@nsedc.com or 907-625-1617).

TO BE BREACHED— Phase I of the Rock Creek mine closure plan is to dewater the tailings storage facility, temporarily place a cover over the existing tailings until they are hauled out and buried in the main pit, and to breach the dam to prevent water from accumulating behind the dam. Phase II of the mine closure is depending on the outcome of discussions between the Native corporations and NovaGold Resources whether or not the existing infrastructure would be transferred to the ownership of BSNC.

Planners to tighten zoning compliance

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Planning Commission met last week in work session to go over its priorities for 2012.

In going over a long list, President Tom Sparks said right off that he would like to limit the items on the to-do list and really fully accomplish fewer items. The remainder of the panel agreed. Going around the table, each commissioner listed his priorities.

Sparks wanted to tackle the issue of Nome's relationship to Dept. of Natural Resources offshore mining leases that City officials believe will consume City resources in law enforcement due to the influx of people during the summer. Add to that the cemetery expansion project, abatement of derelict structures, creating incentives for new, first time home builders and creating policies and procedures to implement Nome's zoning law.

"We haven't had formal zoning issues, but there are violations people can see," Sparks said. "I would like to have a procedure to go through when citizens see violations.

Commissioner Larry Pederson could agree on the need for housing incentives if the policy included fixing already existing houses.

"That would get rid of abatement," Pederson said.

Most planners expressed agreement on the need for policy and procedure manuals for variances, conditional use permits, zoning amendments and zoning violations.

Planning consultant Eileen Bechtol said she would work up a draft.

Commissioner Charlie Weiss favored zoning procedures and amending the City codes to require off street parking for new commercial buildings on Front Street.

Commissioner Randy Romenesko threw his support to developing policies and procedures for zoning issues.

"We need to create a backbone for staff and the public," he said.

Romenesko agreed with Pederson on housing incentives.

"I wouldn't limit it to first-time home owners," he said.

Commissioner Jimmy Adams wanted a focus on economic development—oil, gas, minerals, and an economic development plan.

So, all in all, zoning procedures, incentives for building housing, and economic development won a slot on the planning commission 2012 list of priorities.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 12, 2012 7

In other business, the commission considered a map of proposed sites for the Richard Foster Building. Commissioners were to receive packets, which City Manager Josie Bahnke asked them to review from legal and technical aspects for building sites within the City, hoping they would advise on code requirements and identify preliminary plat conditions for subject properties.

Man accused of sexually assaulting child pleads guilty

By Diana Haecker

Vaughn Johnson of Nome pleaded guilty last week to an amended charge of sexual abuse of a minor in the second degree. The original charge was sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree. Johnson, 57, was accused of sexually abusing a nineyear-old girl and was arrested by Nome police officers on Sept. 5, 2011. The complaint said that he admitted to NPD officer Sgt. Byron Redburn to penetrating the girl's private parts.

During the change of plea, Johnson accepted a waiver of indictment and with that, the case won't go before a Grand Jury. The plea deal sentencing is 15 years with five years

"I never had a time when I didn't work on a case involving child sex abuse."

Nome D.A.John Earthman

suspended. Johnson's sentencing hearing is set for May 8, 2:30 p.m. at the Nome court house.

District Attorney John Earthman said that his office tries to resolve child sex abuse cases before they go to Grand Jury because it is hard on the victims to go through testimony and tell a jury what happened to them. Earthman says that those kind of crimes are not rare. "We deal with these things all the time, they do require a significant amount of our attention," Earthman said. It would be a rare day when the district attorney is not working on a sexual abuse case on a minor. "I never had a time when I didn't work on a case involving child sex abuse," Earthman said.

In general, Earthman said, there are cases that are not reported, may not ever be reported for any kind of reasons that include family loyalty, stigma and shame.

In Kotzebue, troopers also arrested a 40-year-old man who allegedly abused a three-year-old girl. According to the Alaska Trooper dispatch, troopers arrested James Darin Monroe on January 4, for an outstanding warrant for sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree. The warrant was issued after an investigation in December. Monroe fled Kotzebue and was the subject of a search and rescue after not being heard from for several days.

On January 3, searchers found Monroe approximately 22 miles outside of Kotzebue on the Noatak River and he refused to return to Kotzebue. He was dressed for the weather and armed with a revolver. The next day, troopers from the Kotzebue Post, an Alaska Wildlife Trooper and an investigator from the Western Alaska Alcohol Narcotics Team found him in a cabin and took the man into custody without incident. Monroe was transported to the Nome Jail and held on $100,000.00 bail.

Galena Hawks outplay Lady Nanooks

By Stephen Palmatier

Before a full and loud crowd at the Den of the Mighty Nanooks, the Lady Nanooks disappointed, losing both games against the Galena Hawks at home this past weekend. In both games, the Nome ladies lost by 9 points, but both games felt worse than the score indicated with the effectiveness that Galena was playing over the weekend.

In the first game, there were many contributing factors to the loss. The energy seemed to not be there for the Nanooks, as they simply could not contest a shot on defense, allowing the good shooters of Galena to find their rhythm. They also struggled with maintaining possession of the ball by turning it over plenty of times to allow easy baskets for the Hawks on the way back. And also when Nome was able to get inside and provide some good offense forcing fouls by Galena, the Nanooks struggled making their free throws. The passing of Galena was also much stronger as they were able to swing it around with good ball movement eventually leading to an open shooter, which the Nanooks could not defend.

In the next game, the Nanooks' struggles continued to begin the game as they were down 41-16 by halftime. The adjustments that the Nanooks wanted to make to start the second game simply were not shown

'We made adjustments in this second game, but we went away from that quick," said Don Stiles, head coach of the Lady Nanooks. "We got down by such a deficit in the first half that we simply had to just score as fast as we could," said Stiles.

In the second half, it was a completely different game with Nome playing not only terrific defense but also a great offensive half. Nome won the second half by a score of 36-20 but it was simply not enough to overcome with the hole they dug themselves in from the first half. In their height advantage getting into the paint with plenty of easy baskets as well as rebounding strong and creating plenty of turnovers on defense with hustle and intensity.

With the way the Nanooks played the second half, it begs the question of where this team was for the other three halves of the weekend. Coach Stiles thinks it's mainly a mental problem more than anything.

"I think it's just our lack of focus and concentration, and that affects other things which affects their game," said Stiles. "I was really pleased in the second half with the way they focused and played hard," said Stiles.

The question remains with the team if they can be consistent for an entire game both on the offensive and particularly on the defensive ends. With the Subway Showdown looming this coming weekend, Coach Stiles knows that the intensity must be strong by his team.

"Our defense is what it's all about, and we need to make other teams pay for their mistakes," said Stiles.

The Nome ladies look to bounce back in a big way as they play Bethel Thursday evening in the Subway Showdown, the first of three games in three days at the Den of the Mighty Nanooks.

COLDEST DAY IN 13 YEARS—Temperatures dropped down to minus 40° F on January 5 as Nome port officials gear up to receive a historic winter barge fuel delivery this week.

Port panel goes over tariff revisions

Port fee hikes headed the agenda at a Nome Port Commission meeting Jan. 5, but preparations to transfer vehicle petroleum products from the approaching Russian oil tanker Renda slipping through floes behind USCG ice cruncher Healy stole the show. Joy Baker, harbormaster, briefed the panel during the meeting

Nome has enough heating fuel for the winter from combined storage tanks owned by two retail distributors - Bonanza Fuel and Crowley Petroleum Distribution, but a shortage of vehicle fuel without the tanker delivery could park some cars and have more folks traveling on foot or carpooling in taxi cabs. With the Renda approaching the horizon Monday carrying fuel, there have been no organized campaigns to conserve gasoline or low sulfur diesel.

Nome's public works department and harbor personnel will assist in transferring the fuel at the Port of Nome en route up to the Bonanza Fuel tank farm.

Baker has been meeting regularly with federal, state and local agencies that are plotting the orchestration of a safe and efficient delivery of 1.35 million gallons of vehicle fuel across Nome's port headers.

Meanwhile, port commissioners, some with hands-on experience with the curves arctic weather and diminished daylight can throw at fuel handling, queried Baker on practical aspects of the first-ever winter fuel transfer flowing through about 850 feet of four-inch hose running across the sea ice from the T/V Renda to fuel headers on Nome's causeway.

Commissioner Cam Kristensen, employed for years in fuel distribution, wanted to know how long the transfer would take, would there be a booster to push the flow. His experience told him, Kristensen said, "the longer you have something going through, the more chance there is for something to go wrong.

The fuel would course through the hose at a rate of 35,000 gallons an hour, Baker said, taking around two whole days, unless the U.S. Coast Guard limited the delivery to daylight hours, which would stretch it out. Nome this week experienced 7 hrs. 15 min. to 7 hrs. 30 min. of light.

Bulk fuel transfers occur regularly during the summer months when four or five barges bring fuel to the Norton Sound coastal community to heat homes, fuel private and public vehicles and turn the utility power generators. The transport by Vitus Marine and its contract barge, the Renda, home ported in Vladivostok, is the first winter delivery through Bering Sea ice.

Security? There would be a safety zone around the fuel header area, limiting entries to officials directly connected to getting the fuel ashore. Personnel would monitor points along the hose and at headers and tank farm entries. A snow ramp already built last week would support the hose as it came up on the causeway area. The fuel hose, in lengths of about 400 feet would have only one connection on the ice, Baker said. Following the transfer, the Renda crew would pump out the hose and cap it.

Vitus Marine, contracted by Sitnasuak Native Corp. to deliver the fuel to its subsidiary, would provide the know-how for coupling the hoses. (Mark Smith, Vitus Marine CEO, later told the Nome Common Council that the segments had mechanical, screwed down connections with gaskets.). Vitus Marine has been gathering lots of equipment to have a variety

For a smooth transfer, "keep your fingers crossed there is no wind, no ice movement and lots of sunshine," Baker told commissioners.

In other business, the commission:

• Combed over proposed changes in the port tariff document that regulates rules and fees for port users, looking at upping fees for line handling, potable water, and raising the charge for putting outbound fuel across the port from 1.5 cents to 2 cents a gallon. One cause for raising some port fees was to compensate for salary and benefit costs, Baker said. "We use the fees to expand, maintain and repair it [port facilities], she said, "but you have to justify it." The commission discussed having insurance requirements for port users tagged to capacity for hazardous material. Vessels with fuel or hazmat capacity exceeding 50 gals need to carry insurance, but vessels with less capacity would have insurance optional but pay a surcharge per foot for craft without insurance. The revised tariff schedule will come before the Nome Common Council for approval.

 Tossed around the issue of recovering compensation for labor costs, nected with the inflow of people working the recently auctioned underwater mining leases. Could the City tax gold, commissioner Jimmy West, Jr. wondered. "In the absence of a coastal management plan, what is the City's control?" Josie Bahnke, city manager, wondered. This is a question that has City agencies looking for a solution.

· Queried Baker for progress in removing the frozen-in tugboat Rustler from where it has remained along the south wall of the inner harbor since freeze-up despite orders from the port commission and Nome Common Council to remove the vessel. In fall storms, the Rustler's engine room filled with wastewater and had risen to within six inches of the hatches, but these had subsequently been sealed, Baker said. Contractors for removal of the craft had advised that retrieving it in the spring would be more cost efficient. "We haven't forgotten about it," Baker said. "We plan to have the issue in hand by breakup." The commissioners decided that a rule requiring boats to be out of the harbor needed to stay in the tariff.

FLYBOY—Nikolai Ogawa from the Galena Hawks goes high and for two points in the JV game against the Nome Nanooks on January 6. Playing for Nome are Eli Johnson #10 and Josh Gologergen #4. The Nome JV team won their first game against the Galena Hawks JV squad 46-44, lost their second game against Galena 31-

Nanooks, who are now 6-1 to start the season, seem to be playing well, led in particular by two great players.

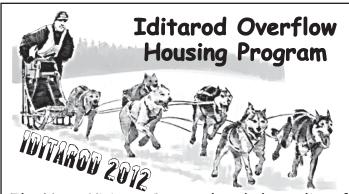

In the first game, the Nanooks were simply too much for the Galena Hawks as the Nanooks dominated, winning 51-33. Nathan Blandford, who has been spectacular to start the season, led the Nanooks with 19 points and added 6 rebounds. Not to be outdone by Blandford's performance was guard Tyler Eide who added 18 points and had five steals. The duo of Blandford and Eide simply has caused havoc for other teams to defend against as they have been lighting up the stat sheet all season with scoring.

The key of the first game, however, was the rebounding battle. The Nanooks outrebound Galena 41-22, including 11 rebounds from center Cass Mattheis. The size and strength of Nome was too much for the Hawks to overcome.

The same thing was true in the second affair as the Nanooks won again 59-49. Again, Blandford and Eide were too strong for the Hawks as Blandford led the way with a game high 27 points and Eide added 19.

The question remaining with the team is the huge production that they ask from their two big scorers each and every game. In order for the Nanooks to continue strong in the season, the other players may need to do their part in some games if one of the two struggle shooting in a night. For now at least, head coach Pat Callahan has his young team riding high.

The Nanooks look to continue their strong start this Thursday evening against Point Hope in the Subway Showdown in front of their home crowd at the Den of the Mighty Nanooks for what will be a three game weekend.

Marketing cholesterol control: A game of chance

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Before going generic in November of 2011, Lipitor, a cholesterollowering drug made by Pfizer, had become the best selling pharmaceutical of all time.

The success of Lipitor is noteworthy not because it works so well at lowering cholesterol, but because the manufacturer, Pfizer, has proven unrivaled in marketing their drug.

Through a combination of directto-consumer advertizing and education to providers, representatives were able to persuade a generation of doctors to prescribe the medication for patients that would likely see little benefit.

To be clear, Lipitor, generically called atorvastatin, can be very helpful to people who have had a heart attack or stroke. It is also good for people who are at high risk of heart disease, like patients with diabetes. But atorvastatin and other cholesterol lowering medications do not help every person who takes them. In fact, between 16 and 23 people with known heart disease would have to take atorvastatin every day for five years in order to lower the risk of a second heart attack in just one patient.

Most cardiologists, not to mention most heart patients, are tolerant of

But what if a patient does not have heart disease or diabetes and just has high cholesterol? Does cholesterol medication help? The answer is yes, but the number needed to treat is much higher. Up to 250 otherwise healthy individuals with high cholesterol would have to take a cholesterol lowering medication every day for five years to prevent one heart attack.

This means many patients have been playing a sort of medical splitthe-pot, paying up to $5 per pill daily along with up to 250 other people for a chance to lower their risk of heart attack and stroke.

The manufacturers of a series of cholesterol lowering drugs, called statins, rode a sensational wave of medical discovery in the 1980s when research showed that people with high cholesterol and blood fats, like triglycerides, tended to have a higher risk for heart attacks and strokes.

Since then, scientists have learned that cholesterol itself is not a disease. Cholesterol is present in every cell of the body performing numerous healthy functions. However, cholesterol levels in the blood csan be used as a gauge of cardiovascular health. Some cholesterol levels represent a healthy state, like elevations in highdensity lipoprotein (HDL) cholesterol. Other cholesterol rises in response to cardiovascular damage, like elevations in low-density lipoprotein (LDL) cholesterol.

Statins work by lowering the LDL levels in the bloodstream. But just as taking acetaminophen (Tylenol) to lower a fever does not treat the cause of the fever, chemically lowering cholesterol levels in the bloodstream by taking a statin does not necessarily change a person's risk of cardiovascular disease or death from another cause. Treating the underlying problem requires changes in

When it comes to preventing cardiovascular disease, no pill is as powerful as a daily walk or a plate full of vegetables. No medication can lower a person's risk of disease like weight loss or smoking cessation. And no blockbuster drug will ever replace the health-promoting effects of salmon and seal oil.

Though a physician may need to prescribe a medication to 250 patients to prevent one from having a heart attack or stroke, only one person has to lose weight, eat more vegetables, or exercise for 30 minutes per day to benefit that one person. It is important to remember that healthy living does not need to be a game of chance.

Cold wreaks havoc with regional water and sewer systems

By Diana Haecker

Bitter cold temperatures hovering around the -30°F mark and colder caused Savoonga water lines to freeze up between the well and the city's water tank. The problem started on January 2, but was fixed by press time on January 10, when temperatures in Savoonga were at -52°F windchill.

Before water and sewer plant operators could thaw out the main waterline, residents were asked to conserve their water usage.

In St.Michael, the water lines were working but the sewer drainage was out of order. The cold caused the vacuum system to break down on January 4. While homes still had running water, drainage from toilets, sinks and bathtubs didn't work. The system was restored on January 10.

The villages of Kobuk and Noatak are experiencing a heating fuel shortage as temperatures dip below -45°F. In Noatak, the store ran out of fuel. In Kobuk, fuel delivery by air was delayed because of inclement weather conditions that didn't allow planes to land at the village airstrip.

Saying it Sincerely

By Father Ross Tozzi, St. Joseph Parish Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

When winter had finally set in for Nome on the edge of the Bering Sea, in the days of Chairman Jason, behold, the wise men and women of the region gathered together asking, "Where is the fuel we ordered last May? We can foresee fuel prices rising and we have come together to do something about it."

When Chairman Jason heard this, he was greatly troubled, and all of Nome with him. Assembling all the chief advisers from Bonanza Fuel, He inquired of them, "Where is the fuel and how will we bring it to Nome?"

They said to him, "The storm of the century in Nome and throughout the region, prevented delivery earlier this fall. Now that the ice has frozen, there will be no delivery: And you, Nome, on the edge of the Bering Sea, will not be provided with your order; unless you find a way around the ice, to bring fuel oil to your people."

Then Chairman Jason called the wise men and women together again and ascertained how they could all work for the fuel oil's appearance.

He then sent the Russian tanker Renda on the high seas and said, "Go and search for fuel on the world market. When you have found it, bring it to Nome, that we may last the winter without paying $9.00 a gallon for fuel."

After their initial meeting, there were many, many, many, many more. Senators from Washington DC and officials from Homeland Security, scientists from UAF's Geophysical Institute, The Coast Guard, and Alaska's Department of Environmental Conservation, the Mayor, the City Manager, the Port Manager and many, many, many more all spent countless hours navigating through the sea of red tape so that the Renda could navigate through the icy waters of the Bering Sea.

And behold, the US Coast Guard icebreaker Healy preceded the Renda, until it came and stopped over the place where the fuel could be brought into Nome. The town of Nome was overjoyed at seeing the Renda, and on entering as close as they could to the harbor the sailors saw the children and mothers and Nomeites of every kind. They delivered the fuel oil taking every precaution that not even a drop of fuel would be spilled. This treasure was more valued than gold in the mining town of Nome. And having been warned in a dream not to return through more dangerous ice, the sailors of the Renda departed for their country by another way.

Brothers and sisters: You have heard for weeks of the fuel oils coming and how many people have worked together for the common good. More precious than fuel oil or gold is the gift that God the Father has given us in the Christ Child. You are the stewards of God's grace in this generation.

- Share the gift of the Christ Child with others that they may follow the golden rule and always work together for the common good.
- Share the gift of the Christ Child with others so that the light of Christ shines brightly in the darkness and bitter cold of this winter.
- · Share the gift of the Christ Child with others so that they may joy in the spiritual fuel that energizes the soul not merely for a winter but for a lifetime and beyond.

Dear Editor

Two recent criminal cases in Anchorage shocked many citizens. In the first, a man injected a 14-year-old girl with heroin, causing her death. In the other a driver struck a pair of pedestrians injuring both of them gravely. They were walking along an Anchorage sidewalk, heading home from a New Year's celebration, when they were hit by a reckless, and possibly intoxicated, driver who tried to flee the scene. While we cannot forget that no one has been found guilty in either case yet, Alaskans are rightly outraged about the behavior that led to both incidents.

In two weeks, I will convene a Crime Summit in Juneau. Attending are prosecutors, police officers, corrections officials, and court system representatives. We will be assessing the state of crime in Alaska, looking for ways to more effectively prevent crime, catch perpetrators, and, where possible, rehabilitate offenders.

In looking for answers to the crime problems that bedevil Alaska,

Nome has not been above 0°F since Dec. 23 and broke records on January 3 with -37°F (old -34°F, 1949), Jan. 4 with -38°F (old -34°F, 1917) and tied with the old record of -40°F from 1917 on Jan. 5.

Ten Eyck said that the cold air mass is still lingering over the region, although winds brought up the temperatures a notch. Once the winds stop, the basic cold air mass is still in place to make the temperatures plunge again into the -25°F range.

Dear Editor,

My husband, John B Carter II, is a crewmember aboard the Cutter Healy and we have lived here in Marysville since 2004 when we bought our first home. Also, I believe there are several other crewmen who live here in Marysville, but I would have to ask because I'm not sure. My husband was originally scheduled to be home for the holidays (he has been gone since May 27) but due to this last minute mission to Nome they are now due home around January 21. Back in early December, the U.S. Senators for Alaska sent a request to the U.S. Coast Guard asking that the Healy break ice so that fuel could be delivered to Nome. Over my husband's 20-year Coast Guard career, this is the longest he has been gone from home.

Sincerely, Heidi Carter Marysville, WA

While January may get into the history books for being colder than normal for an extended stretch of time, December 2011 proved to be one of the wettest and snowiest on the 105-years of climatological history in Nome. The NWS metereologists say that it was the wettest December in 60 years. Nome set four daily snowfall records in December associated with a series of three back-to-back blizzards that dumped more than 17.5 inches of snow on Nome and surrounding areas. With the exception of the week of warm blizzards, last December was also 3°F colder than normal with an average temperature of 6.5°F.

TIER II REPORTING

NOME

Local

Planning

Committee

The Nome LEPC is presenting government agencies and private entities in the Bering Straits Region with information related to Tier II reporting requirements. This is in accordance with federal regulations in Title III of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986, Section 312, Public Law 99499, codified at 42 U.S.C. Section 11022. The Act is also known as SARA Title III.

Annual Tier II reports are required by organizations that maintain a physical inventory of applicable hazardous chemicals in quantities that are equal to or exceed threshold limits. Some organizations are exempt from reporting requirements per SARA Title III or other federal regulations. All organizations are exempt for inventory below threshold limits.

Tier II reporting provides specific information to the public, local government (including the Fire Department), and state government, about hazardous chemicals present at your facility at any time during the year. Complete reporting includes submitting a copy of the Materials Safety Data Sheet (MSDS) for all chemicals that meet threshold limits.

Your organization may receive a letter in the next few weeks. Detailed information and instructions will be included in the packet. If you do not receive a letter, please contact the Nome LEPC by calling (907)443-8522 or if you have any questions as to whether or not your organization may be required to submit annual inventory reports in accordance with the Act.

knowledged that this number is going to go up, "With a lower starting point on dollars and positions, we can have a public conversation with the Legislature about more effective use of the public's dollars." That said, I believe there is going to be a push from the administration to contain the growth of the operating budget. Ten years ago in 2002 the operating budget totaled $6.5 billion. What has enabled this drastic increase of the operating budget in one decade is the new world of high oil prices and the revamping of the States oil tax system. All conventional wisdom is that in a best case scenario the State revenue will remain flat but there is a substantial risk of falling revenues. In the short and mid-term current prices and production levels will allow us some wiggle room as will our savings in the Constitutional Budget Reserve, but in the long term we will have to reconcile revenues and expenditures. There is consensus building that it will be better to do this now when times are good then waiting until the wolf is at the door.

The Capital budget is a different animal. It's currently $1,785,124,673 which is down $1,013,953,327 (57 percent) from last year. That is offset by a bond package that's proposed at $350,000,000 which will also be capital expenditures. That leaves us about $650 million below last year. I expect we will see that gap close over the course of budget negotiations. The Governor's impetus for this $2.1 billion package is the need for infrastructure improvement. I am in agreement that the State is behind the times on this, especially in rural areas. There is currently $123,343,058 in the Capital budget for HD 39 and $10,000,000 in the bond package. This puts our district at the top of the heap going into this cycle. The make-up of these expenditures is mainly big ticket items, schools, airports, state buildings, ports etc. (Please contact our office for your community's specifics.) We will be working with our communities to fill what holes we can in local infrastructure needs. Unlike the Operating budget the Capital budget doesn't commit the State to future expenditures. So while we've seen this balloon over years it does not ultimately determine the State's sustainable funding level. My view is that this is where budget surpluses should be spent so we can be ahead of the curve when funding gets tight.

Oil taxes are still going to be the main focus this year along with gas line discussions. I expect to see some new idea raised on oil and gas taxes including State Directed Financial Investments (SDFI) and the decoupling of oil and gas taxes but it's still too early to say what these will ultimately look like or what support they will garner. In short SDFI would have the state invest directly in exploration and development projects thus assuring in-state expenditures. Whether or not Coastal Zone Management will be a major issue will depend mostly on the ability of the sponsors to get the required signatures before January 17. If they do it will put significant pressure on opponents to try and reach a compromise. If you'd like to get involved with this process go to the initiative website http://www.alaskacoastalmanagement.org/ or call (907) 957-4540.

The Supreme Court trial on redistricting will begin January While the new shape and composition of HD 39 is not part of the case, our fate is still intertwined with the court's decision. If the district in question (HD 38) is ruled unconstitutional the entire map will have to go back to the drawing board. There are no quick $\bar{\text{f}}$ ixes that will meet the requirements of both the Alaska Constitution and the Voting Rights Act (VRA). The court's ruling hinges on how they balance the competing elements of these two mandates. One important note is that the five point test the State court uses to determine a plan's legality does not include the federal VRA. I do however think the court will understand that the Redistricting Board must clear that bar and will take that into consideration.

The Nome office will be closed during session so please contact the Juneau office with any questions. Happy New Year

My office is available to answer questions or to help with issues related to the state. Please feel free to contact me or my staff (907) 465-3789.

the irresistible sitting-on the-theedge-of-chairs tidbit that Nome suffers a dire shortage of heating fuel in dark subzero weather-all untrue. The community has enough heating fuel, according to officials at both companies-Bonanza and Crowley Petroleum Distribution; Sitnasuak, not the City of Nome, contracted the tanker delivery; summer barges have already delivered fuel for heating, fuel to turn power supply generators, and some vehicle fuel, but not enough to Bonanza to satisfy their market share without the Renda delivery.

Another barge company, Delta Western, had slated a September delivery of the 1.6 million gallons of fuel, then rescheduled for a couple of arrivals in October, according to Nome port commissioners, when the Alaska coast was ice-free all the way to Kaktovik on the Beaufort Sea, according to National Snow and Ice Data Center. Delta Western attempted a late voyage with the fuel, but following a storm Nov. 8-10, a cold snap several days later flashfroze shipping lanes. Delta Western officials attributed earlier delays to bad weather in the Aleutian Island area. Delta Western wrote him a check as compensation, but it was not enough to make it right with Sitnasuak shareholders, Evans said last

The drama lay in Sitnasuak Native Corp., facing a need to fly in hundreds of thousands of gallons of vehicle fuel 5,000 gallons at a time, having to pay $2 to $4 per gallon for air cargo and pass it on to consumers. But Evans, sorting options, came up with a better idea with Alaska barge company Vitus Marine to manage the unique winter through-the-ice fuel delivery to Nome. With no such tankers tied up in Alaska, the project found the iceclass T/V Renda in its homeport of Vladivostok and retained it to go to Asia for ultra low sulfur diesel, required by environmental conservation laws for vehicles using diesel fuel, and gasoline for delivery to Sitnasuak's tank farm. Evans said last week he could not predict the prices at the gas pump following delivery until he had considered all variables, but denied customers would have to pay the media-circulated price of $9 a gallon. He thought the tanker delivery would result in shipping prices dramatically lower than airfreight, he said.

So far, so good, but then the work began to clear obstacles added onto the logistics required to get the tanker safely through winter seas and low temperatures. The tanker had to pass a U.S. Coast Guard inspection for safety and environmental concerns to assure its compliance with laws of the United States to enter American waters. Vitus Marine had to ask the state Dept. of Environmental Conservation for an addendum to its fuel discharge plan already on file to cover the risks of the first-time winter barge delivery where summer marine deliveries to the fly-in, fly-out Western Alaska coastal communities are commonplace. The 103-page document contained detailed plans for arresting and abating a spill, including a sample action plan for an actual spill, as well as statements of spill insurance and other documents from Rimsco, the Russian company that owns the tanker.

The USCG had to juggle the schedule of the Healy and its crew to return to Alaska from Seattle for the assignment after letting off researchers from a science project in the Bering Sea area. As a result, the Healy's crewmembers needed to stay aboard during the holidays.

Early this month, Vitus Marine received approval for the voyage from ADEC after an accelerated sevenday comment period, short of the usual 30 days. The tanker then set out from Vladivostok to Korea where it loaded 1,062,000 gallons of ultra low-sulfur diesel vehicle fuel, but no gasoline. The available gasoline at the Korean docks had been configured to meet Southern California emissions standards. Plan B called for the Renda to take gasoline suited to cold weather from Japan, along the way to Alaska. That supply met the needs of cold weather use—able to ignite at low temperatures and to flow without gelling in fuel lines.

Alas, logistics of tying up at the Japanese fuel dock and weather throwing a wrench in plans for a barge transfer to the Renda midocean sent the Renda to Dutch Harbor to obtain gasoline from Delta Western tanks.

This raised a new challenge—to use the T/V Renda to transport fuel from Dutch Harbor to Nome, Vitus Marine had to obtain a waiver of the federal Jones Act of 1920 that says only American built vessels operated by American staff may transfer cargo between American ports. Without the waiver, the Renda would skip Dutch Harbor and meet the ice cruncher Healy to head directly to Nome with its million gallons plus of ultra low sulfur diesel vehicle fuel but no gasoline.

The Jones Act waiver came through from the federal Dept. of Homeland Security on Jan. 2.

The Renda turned toward Dutch Harbor where USCG inspectors waited with clipboards in hand for a port state inspection for entering domestic waters.

"The tanker vessel Renda met all applicable federal laws and regulations and can operate in U.S. waters following the successful completion of a required Coast Guard port state control examination," said Rear Adm. Thomas Ostebo, commander District 17 in a USCG release. "Our daily discussions will continue with our federal, state, local, tribal partners, and the marine industry to ensure the highest standards of safety and compliance are in place to mitigate risks to the people of Nome, the crews of the vessels, and the environment.'

The Renda loaded up all available gasoline—290,000 gallons—from Delta Western and weighed anchor with the Healy on Jan. 4. But alas, around mid-day the Renda's engine blew a valve, according to the Coast Guard. The tanker, slowed to 2-3 knots, had to make a U-turn and go back to Broad Bay, near Dutch Harbor, to kill its engines and make repairs. The Renda and the Healy resumed the voyage to Nome early Thursday, Jan. 5.

When the caravan reached the edge of the ice pack, the Healy began the arduous task of cutting the Renda through more than 300 miles of ice growing southward with cold temperatures. The Renda, rehulled in 2010 to meet double-hull laws on tankers, is rated for four-foot ice, but has gone through thicker ice, according to statements filed with ADEC by its Vladivostok owners, Rimsco, a marine surveyor and transport outfit.

With every organization cooperating that could hang a business card on the operation, the USCG held daily briefing and discussion teleconferences that included City of Nome, Alaska Pilots Association.

federal Dept. of Fish and Wildlife, Sitnasuak Native Corp., state Dept. of Fish and Game, members of Congress, state officials, for a sampling, to sort out logistics for a safe and successful delivery. Representatives of these interests were to fly into Nome over the past weekend. NOAA/National Weather Service has been providing spot ice reports to agencies involved in logistics. The Alaska Army National Guard has made their Nome hangar available for air support. The manager of UAF's Unmanned Aircraft program, Gregory M. Walker, was to send up a two-pound unmanned aircraft Wednesday to make images of Nome's harbor in support of the fuel delivery.

The Renda and Healy are following a route that steers clear of St. Lawrence Island, according to a National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration incident report. This is a critical habitat for the spectacled eider bird, and other possible concerns that the transit may encounter- Native seal hunting grounds, polar bear and walrus critical habitats for example. A decision eliminated the route west of St Lawrence Island and only considered routes east of the island, near Nunivak Island along the west coast of Alaska.

An ice expert from University of Alaska Fairbanks, Dr. Andy Mahoney, drilled several core samples from ice in Nome's port area Jan. 4, according to NOAA information. He estimated the ice thickness in the harbor at 2.7 ft - 3.5 ft. He also drilled near a pressure ridge blocking the harbor and determined the thickness of the ridge ranges between a minimum of 15-16 ft. and a maximum of 29 ft-21 ft below sea surface and 9 ft high above the surface. There was about 5-6 ft of water under the ice ridge. He also estimated feasible snowmachine travel would be limited to within the first 50 ft offshore due to the characteristics of the ice.

Joy Baker, harbormaster, confirmed last week that the plan called for the Renda to transfer the fuel by a four-inch hose that would bridge the gap from the Renda to the fuel transit hookup at the Nome causeway. Smith told the Nome Common Council Monday that the hose would roll out in 400-ft. sections and have mechanical couplings with interface gaskets and screw fitted. The Renda's hose was certified by Russian authorities for offloading fuel on deliveries to military stations along the Northern Sea Route in the Russian arctic, according to Smith.

With an estimate that the fuel would flow through the hoses at a rate of 35,000 gallons an hour, the delivery could take 36 to 42 hours, Joy Baker, Nome's harbormaster said. If safety agencies determined the fuel should flow only during daylight hours, Nome's current daily duration of less than eight hours of light could stretch the delivery to five days or so.

The USCG has announced a 100-yard security zone around the Renda and a 50 yard closed security zone at the fuel hoses and operations worksites.

John Kotula of state DEC told Nome Common Council Monday evening he had spent most of the day looking at equipment and procedures with local people. The project had involved a lot of hands in Nome, he said. Considerable spill equipment belongs to local fuel vendors, Port of Nome and Nome Joint Utility System and is kept in warm storage

Scott Henderson, Bonanza's fuel manager, told the Nome Common Council Monday that he appreciated working closely with all the company's partners to make the fuel delivery safe for staff and the environment.

Nome's first winter fuel delivery comes across the ice

By Sandra L.Medearis

The Russian tanker Renda started discharging a welcome and vital fuel supply to storage tanks in Nome at 5:06 p.m. Monday. The transfer will take several days to complete.

A transfer team turned on the flow a few minutes after sunset, following safety inspections of the connections by the Captain of Port and Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation, according to Kip Wadlow, U.S. Coast Guard public affairs.

The tanker, under escort from Dutch Harbor with the USCG ice breaker Healy, brought 1.4 millions of gasoline and ultra low sulfur diesel to replace a failed shipment that Bonanza Fuel distributors needed to top off a winter supply for vehicle travel. The diesel fuel may go into heating tanks drained by prolonged cold weather, before winter ends.

After following the icebreaker through 350 miles of ocean locked by ice to four feet thick for over a week, the Renda rocked into place about half a mile from the fuel dock late Saturday afternoon where it will stay until all 1.4 million gallons of fuel have discharged to storage

Bonanza Fuel contracted with Alaska barge and marine company Vitus Marine to transport the fuel. Vitus Marine found the tanker idle after a completed charter in Vladivostok; the fuel supply project weighed anchor and got underway.

The Coast Guard icebreaker joined the Renda for the trip to Nome after it loaded over one million gallons of ultra low sulfur diesel in South Korea and picked up 290,000 gallons of gasoline at Dutch Harbor, Alaska.

"This morning the ice had frozen around the Renda to the point that light vehicle operations could start and hose had been laid." USCG Petty Officer Sara Francis, public affairs, said Monday afternoon.

The Russian-flagged tanker Renda is in fuel transfer offload position 460 yards southeast of the fuel riser on the Port of Nome causeway. Its escort, USCG Healy lies 863 yards to the east, a little over a mile from Nome's beach on Norton Sound, a bay off the Bering Sea extending into western Alaska. The 470-foot Healy is the Coast Guard's only operating icebreaker.

Personnel used snowmachines and tracked vehicles to lay about 1,400 feet of 4-inch hoses, one each for the gasoline and diesel fuels, coming off the Renda along with some extra feet of hose to allow the line to go over ice ridges and to provide slack in case the Renda moves.

The fuel line comprises 400-foot segments with absorbent pads underlying each hose connection on the ice in case there are small leaks.

The transfer had to begin in the daylight but then could continue around the clock under artificial light, safety rules said. The transfer team planned to begin slowly and if all went well, increase the flow to a safe rate of 30,000 gallons an hour, according to a statement from National Ocean and Atmospheric Administration. Transfer crews have emergency shutoff procedures in Mark Smith, CEO of Vitus Marine, the barge service company staging the fuel supply project, said precautions were in place for safety of the environment.

"Bonanza Fuel has arranged for 24-hour watch at the Renda and to monitor transfer hoses and connections every 30 minutes. There will be City of Nome personnel at the fuel header and at Bonanza. There is enough staffing to maintain these positions 24 hours a day."

Rear Admiral Thomas P. Ostebo, visiting Nome this week, compared the mission to get the Renda to Nome with a long tradition of ice breaking for ships on the Great Lakes.

"It's a real honor be a part of this, to be able to help Nome get through their winter energy needs," he said. "The project is only at its halfway point. Our goal is that nobody gets hurt, no product gets spilled, we have no accidents—its not over until the Renda is out of the ice and headed back to Russia, the Healy is on the way back to Seattle, and all

Airport plan: Snake River stays put

By Sandra L. Medearis

A refined Nome Airport 20-year master plan update has come out showing the best plan for the least money.

Highlight of the plan is what is not in it: moving the Snake River bed. At most, the design would shove the Snake a couple hundred feet to accommodate a soft concrete stop at the west end of the west-east main runway, according to Ivet Hall, DOT engineer.

In choosing from five alternatives presented to the community a year ago, planners considered safety, function and engineering and environmental implications. The full implementation of this master plan would cost $147.9 million.

Moving the Snake River outlet to Norton Sound once more, this time to accommodate airport expansion and upgrades would simply be too costly and unfeasible, according to consultants charged with drawing up a 20-year plan. At most, a section of

Nancy and all the residents of Nome and the surrounding towns, my wife and I have been following your plight to get needed fuel. We just wanted to let you know we have prayed for all involved, tanker, ice breakers, crews and residents. We are relieved to hear the tanker has made it close enough to start the transfer process.

of the coast guard cutter, the Bear (January 12). Our father and mother, Carl and Marie Johnson, were rescued by the Bear from the shores of Koluchin Bay on the Siberian coast back in September of 1923. The book, A Cup of Tears, by Florence Smith (2000) details their experiences in the Arctic and contains the following statement about the Bear (pages 137-138):

Built in 1873 in Scotland, the Bear was not designed as an ice cutter. But it was made of sturdy oak planking six inches thick, fastened with the best Swedish iron. Australian ironwood sheathed its hull and steel plates, extending up to the water line, protected the boat as it rammed through the ice. Dubbed a 'sailing battering ram" by the crew, the Bear, with its 19 ft. draft, had to use small boats for access to the shore.

Carl had been a fur trader in Siberia in the summers during those early days (1910-1923) and brought Siberian dogs back to Nome at the end of each summer. During the winters he raced his Siberian dogs against the teams of Johnny "Iron Man" Johnson, Leonhard Seppala, and others. Vintage photos always make our imaginations soar.

FIFTY YEARS AGO— It is exactly 50 years ago in January 1962, that my husband, Michael O'Neill (now deceased) and I arrived in Nome where he was to teach. We came from Boston, Massachusetts, where we later taught. The superintendent, Mr. Potter, was happy to find out I, too, was a teacher, as someone else had left. We were thoughtfully met at the plane with the warm jackets we are wearing in the photo. We didn't realize we were walking on the Bering Sea! And, girls wore skirts then! It had just been -40°F! My memories of the people we met and of the children are happy ones. I often check out the cam, and your paper, which I remember well. I wish you well. Ellen O'Neill. Boston,

Endurance

The rumors of our demise are premature. How many calls did we get to see that we have not turned into Popsicles? How many Facebook friends thought we were out of fuel? How many emails did we get to tell us folks were praying for our town? Now, we gratefully accept the prayers because we can always use them, but doesn't it make us feel bad that the whole world thinks we need to reenact the Serum Run?

Yes, we had enough heating fuel. Yes, we were low on vehicle fuel. Yes, we are concerned because we want to know how much this rescue event will cost us. We don't want to be paying at the pumps for a business shortcoming and scheduling error by Bonanza Fuel and Delta Western. How many man-hours have the City of Nome and its Public Works crew put in? How much time has our Emergency Planning crew devoted to this? How many hours have Crowley, Bonanza and Nome Joint Utilities spent getting ready for spill response readiness? How much did it cost to re-open our Port of Nome facilities? How much has the University of Alaska spent on its drone reconnaissance? How much have we spent for TSA security and the National Guard? How much does it cost to run an icebreaker? How do we correct the factual errors put out by national news organizations? How do we educate the world about reality in Nome? Should we try?

We are grateful to the United States Coast Guard and the Healy and its crew. They have done what they have been asked to do and have made a fine job of it. We are also thankful to the crew of the Russian fuel tanker Renda, These guardsmen and merchant marines have done a task second to none. We hope everyone has learned a lot and that next year Bonanza brings its fuel barge to Nome in Au--N.L.M.

A Look at the Past

LIVING ON THE EDGE — Here we are on May 24, 1915, "Nomeites on ice greeting Corwin, first boat one mile out on the Bering Sea at Nome, Alaska." Always gracious and grateful souls, today's Nomeites are thankful to the crews of the USCG Healy Ice Breaker and the Russian Renda Tanker for their personal sacrifices in delivering Sitnasuak's fuel to Nome.

Judge sides with NSEDC in all aspects of Smith's challenge to the 2009 election

By Tyler Rhodes, NSEDC Communications Director

NOME—In a ruling issued Jan. 9, 2012, Alaska Superior Court Judge Michael Jeffery has affirmed Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation's election practices and rejected, in its entirety, a challenge to the seating of Don Stiles as Nome's representative to the NSEDC Board of Directors following the fall 2009 election.

Judge Jeffery's favorable rulings for NSEDC came in response to a lawsuit filed by Nome resident Tim Smith in November 2009. Smith failed to win the election for the Nome seat and subsequently filed a suit with a wide range of claims that were ultimately ruled either meritless or irrelevant.

'We at Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation are gratified to see that Judge Jeffery has affirmed what we believed all along—that Mr. Smith's allegations were without merit and that NSEDC has acted properly in establishing its election rules," said NSEDC Board Chairman Dan Harrelson.

By issuing a summary judgment in NSEDC's favor, Judge Jeffery has spared NSEDC the additional time and costs it would have incurred to defend itself had the suit gone to trial. "It is frustrating that we already have spent more than two years answering this suit, expending resources and using time that we would have preferred to devote to NSEDC's programs and initiatives that support our region and its residents," Harrelson said.

Besides putting an end to the groundless suit, NSEDC is pleased that Judge Jeffery's ruling supports NSEDC's bylaws which allow more of the region's residents to participate in board member elections-ei-

Commentary on the judgment in Smith vs. Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

By Tim Smith

The only reason NSEDC ever held elections for its board of directors is because they were court ordered to do so following the complaint I filed

On January 9, this year, another court issued a ruling that means NSEDC is no longer obligated to elect board members in fair and open elections. The judge held that as a privately owned nonprofit corporation having no individual members, the NSEDC board and not the residents of the 15 NSEDC communities will get to decide who will sit on the board in the future.

NSEDC was founded in 1989 before the CDQ program existed. Its articles of incorporation and bylaws contained the following provisions, 'membership in this corporation shall be available and open to all persons interested in the goals and purposes of the organization as stated in the bylaws. The corporation recognizes and admits to the principle that all persons are equal and that this corporation does not discriminate against anyone on the basis of race, color, ethnic origin or religion."

After the CDQ program came along in 1992 and brought millions of dollars of fisheries revenue to the region, things changed radically as they often do when money is involved. The individuals who seized control of NSEDC in 1992 locked out the people who were formerly members to maintain exclusive control of their newly created hoard of cash. They didn't hold elections for their board of directors and all of their financial and other records were kept secret.

Today, NSEDC's governing docu-

I (Gene) am 74. Lillian, Helen and I attended the 100 Year Anniversary race in Nome in 2008 and were pleased to see that our father, Carl Johnson, was part of a display in the Nome Library. There are a number of books which reference them. One is Icebound by Captain James Ash-

When I lived in Anchorage (1965 1990) I met the Nome Eskimo artist, Robert Mayokuk, who told me that he had heard stories about my mother, Marie, when he was young in Nome. In fact, Mr. Mayokuk and Marie met face-to-face in 1967.

Another family member who had extensive experience in the Arctic was my uncle, Olaf Swenson, Swenson captained a ship named the "King and Wing," And it was he who first took the stranded crew of the ill-fated Karluk off their refuge island. In the NBC Dateline TV documentary that aired several years ago, that crew is seen on Olaf's boat before Captain Bartlett arrived and transferred them to his boat-with all of the glory going to Bartlett (not to Swenson). Olaf wrote a book titled, Northwest of the World, published in about 1944. He was married to our father's sister, Charlotte.

At one time during the search for Ben Eielson and his lost airplane, Olaf Swenson's daughter, Marian, was with him on the boat. Marian sent detailed messages via wireless to the New York Times.

As you might guess, any archival photos of old Nome and the Bear are of interest to us. In 2008 we brought a family album of old pictures of Nome, Siberia, dog teams, native scenes, Lindeberg's horse, etc, with us. The Nome library archived many of these photos.

Sincerely, Gene Johnson Polson, MT 59860

riverbank would be pushed over, but not rerouted, to allow a lengthening of the main runway. A number of years ago, port upgrades moved the mouth of the Nome River and filled in the jetty. Planning currently under way satisfies a Federal Aviation Administration requirement that airport plans have updates to qualify for federal funding.

Nome Airport is a transportation hub for travel in and out of villages on the Seward Peninsula as well as providing a link to Ted Stevens International Airport in Anchorage. It handles about 59,000 passengers annually and about 19,000 tons of cargo and mail. The airport last had its plan examined and updated in

The state Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities and its consultants considered several scenarios and released a draft plan last month that provides guidelines, schedules, and budgets for future airport development that meet aviation demands in a financially feasible way. It aims to resolve aviation, safety, capacity environmental and socio-economic issues that confront the airport and the communities it serves. The plan covers development of facilities for the planning period 2016-2036. It addresses the need for a longer runway, runway safety area expansion, parallel runways and taxi lanes, maintenance, weather, transient aircraft parking, among other issues.

DOT&PF retained PDC Inc. Engineers who conducted a comprehensive study of Nome Airport and came up with a preferred alternative that would require a financial commitment of $147.9 million. Because of the number of airports in the state sharing the pie and based on current economic conditions and federal funding changes, implementation of the recommended improvements would require unique financing instruments with a keen eye toward leveraging every available funding source, planners said.

The scenario settled on pending public comment divides work into three segments: five-year phase, 10 year phase and 20 year phase. As an example, proposed work for the Capital Improvements Projects Phase 1–2016 to 2021—totals $29.7 million and includes:

- Partial reconstruction of runway 10/28—$23 million.
- Future airport boundary (property acquisition required)—$2 million.
- Storm water plan—$75 million.
- Terminal area apron reconstruction and resurfacing—$4.6 million.

Phase 2—five to 10 years—would cost a proposed include:

DOT&PF held one of three meetings in Nome on the plan during the holidays. Assuming the Nome Elementary School holiday program offered insurmountable competition, only a handful of people turned out to Old St. Joe's for the presentation, even though staff mailed meeting notices to post office box holders.

The good news is that the plan in its entirety can be downloaded from www dot nomeairport com. Paper copies of the tome are available for inspection at Nome City Hall, library, Kawerak, Inc., Nome Eskimo Community, Sitnasuak Native Corp. and DOT&PF office.

ther as a candidate or a voter. Mr. Smith argued, in vain, that those residing outside municipal boundaries should be prevented from voting for NSEDC board members. Judge Jeffery's decision affirms that NSEDC is right to allow more of the region's residents to participate in elections and not deny them the right to run for the board or vote for their preferred candidate.

NSEDC is additionally satisfied that Judge Jeffery's ruling affirms several obvious, yet crucial, elements that allow NSEDC—or any other nonprofit organization—to properly function and operate. These findings include:

• The NSEDC Board of Directors has the ability to amend the corporation's bylaws. This applies to board member elections as well as other matters.

• NSEDC's bylaws, as amended in 2008, are valid.

 NSEDC's bylaws determining voter eligibility for NSEDC board member elections are valid. This defines eligible voters as any registered voter residing within the state precinct boundaries encompassing the member community.

• NSEDC has the ability to conduct its board member elections with rules and provisions that differ from municipal election rules (i.e. allowing residents who live outside the municipal boundaries, but within the state precinct, to vote; or establishing a 40 percent threshold for a candidate to win).

"NSEDC welcomes putting this distraction behind us and moving forward as we continue our work to create opportunity and benefits for our 15 member communities and their residents," Harrelson said.

ments contain the following passage, "communities satisfying the requirements set forth in the bylaws are eligible for membership in the corporation. The individual residents of those communities or any other community are not eligible for membership." That's a major departure from the way things were with respect to the rights of regional residents in NSEDC.

Prior to 1992, as with most nonprofit corporations in America, NSEDC's members owned NSEDC. The members were the people living in Norton Sound communities. We are no longer the owners. Now, NSEDC management says they represent us but how they represent us is up to them.

Even though NSEDC agreed to the 1994 judgment in order to end litigation, the people in control never really went along with the concept of fair and open elections. Things got out of hand in 2006 when Nome's NSEDC election had to be overturned because of election fraud and a new one held. NSEDC was making up election rules as they went along.

Following the 2009 election, I asked the court to again review the rules governing NSEDC director elections and tell us what rights Norton Sound residents have when it comes to choosing our CDQ program representatives. Judge Jeffery ruled that the NSEDC bylaws control how our representatives are chosen and the NSEDC board of directors unilaterally determines the content of the bylaws. Norton Sound residents don't have any say in it.

Judge Jeffery's decision confirms that the rules for CDQ group governance are inadequate for protecting the rights of the people living in the 65 CDQ eligible communities that the program was supposed to benefit.

I am hoping that this judgment will serve as a wakeup call to Congress and the Alaska Legislature about the need for additional law-making to codify the rights of the residents of our communities to participate meaningfully in decisions about how CDQ program resources will be used. If we don't enact laws detailing how NSEDC and the other CDQ groups are supposed to be governed, we shouldn't be surprised when we find that we have no voice in what happens to our CDQ program money.

Contrary to what NSEDC is saying, this case was never about who can or can't vote for NSEDC board members. What it was about is determining who, under the existing laws, gets to make the rules for how the residents of our 15 Norton Sound communities participate in NSEDC governance. Now that we know, it is time to talk to the lawmakers about making the necessary changes to ensure that community residents are fairly and meaningfully represented in this important program.

Nome Elementary School principal resigns

By Lori Head

The Nome Board of Education approved six administrative 2012-2013 contracts at their regular meeting on January 10, 2012. Noticeably absent from the list was Dave Keller's name, Nome Elementary School principal. He explained that he had handed in a resignation several weeks ago to Michael Brawner, superintendent, due to a desire to live closer to his aging mother in Wisconsin after this school year. Keller received words of appreciation and well wishes from Brawner and board members.

FY12 Winter budget revisions

FY 12 proposed budget revisions were generally good news. Fuel budgeted at $4 a gallon had been purchased instead at $3.52 for a savings of $86,770. A revision of $427,438 was added as revenue due to an increased enrollment of 35 students, including two intensive needs students and six Extensions Homeschool students. Due to the increases, Cathi Wojtanek, business manager, explained that she was "not looking to dip into the fund balance and we're able, maybe, to put some money away for capital projects. But that's all subject to what happens." If the revisions remain, the fund balance would not need to be reduced by $172,185 and an additional $200,000 would be budgeted for capital projects to "begin addressing the future need to upgrade the fire alarm and sprinkler systems in the Charter School area" per Wojtanek's written proposal.

Nome Elementary (NES) news

In Keller's written report he noted progress in the 56er population (5th and 6th graders) due to "recent efforts and administrative assistance."

NES was randomly selected to participate in one-minute dental screenings due to a large portion of its students being American Indian or Alaska Native. Kindergarten through 3rd grade students received a screening on January 18, completed by a dentist or dental therapist using only a mouth mirror. Letters will be mailed out to alert any dental problems observed.

Thursday, February 9 will be an early release day to make up for the first snow day school closure. Parent-Teacher conferences will take place the same day, in the afternoon. Lunch will not be served on February 9

Nome Elementary administrative support

Brawner explained to the board that the individual originally chosen to support efforts with discipline issues at Nome Elementary School had instead decided to pursue an opportunity in Asia. Due to the challenges inherent to finding quality, available, short-time help during the middle of a school year Brawner requested the board's support to split the job offer between two administrators. The first 20 days would be covered by Dan Eide, and the last 60 days by Joe Braach - both experienced administrators who have worked in the Bering Strait School District. Board member Jennifer Reader asked if either administrator was able to work the entire term, or perhaps someone in the area that wasn't currently working could be hired. Brawner explained that his first efforts were focused on that ideal, however, the top candidates were unable to work the entire time, but willing to work for portions and he felt that was best plan to pursue.

Winter wear for students

Megan Brewer, a former teacher of Nome Public Schools, and highly regarded, passed away a little over a year ago. Her family asked that a memorial fund of approximately $4,500 be spent helping economically disadvantaged students in Nome. Keller announced that $75 REI gift cards for 61 students were given to families to help purchase winter wear.

LED lighting at Nome Elementary School

tary School Bill Potter, maintenance director, addressed the board to explain the two action items on the agenda dealing with LED lights. The first, Norman Lamps LED High/Low Bay light purchase, was replacement lights for the elementary gym and totaled $19,503.37. The second item, Gray Bar Electric LED light purchase, was to finish the elementary school with 1,500 four feet lights and other exterior light fixtures for a total of $74,864.89. Potter explained that the cost of these two purchases would leave about $5,000 as a cushion if freight costs were higher than anticipated. The plan is to install the lights during spring break. The lights were funded by NSEDC's $100,000 Community Benefit Share Program, money turned over to Nome Public Schools by the Nome Common Council.

Nome Beltz Jr./Sr. High

On January 19, Bill Kasmier will be conducting an assembly for students on good decision making and setting goals. Kasmier was considered the world's strongest man at one time and has won many national strength competitions according to Steve Gast, principal.

Dual credit courses are being offered in the health fields and math. The three health classes through UAF Northwest Campus are: Emergency Trauma Training First Responder, Introduction to the Health Field & First Aid/CPR, and Professionalism in the Workplace & First Aid/CPR.

December students of the month

Samuel Deering was honored as the junior high student of the month for reasons including his great work ethic and sense of humor, creativity and thoughtfulness.

The high school recipient was Keane Moore who has impressive plans of pursuing two programs at the University of Alaska Fairbanks; one as a heavy duty equipment operator and the other, an airplane mechanic.Congratulations to both

Spirit of Youth recognition awards

Todd Hindman, teacher/principal of Anvil City Science Academy was awarded with a Spirit of Youth Award for ACSA's participation with the ALISON (Alaska Lake Ice and Snow Observatory Network) project. The Nome-Beltz Drama Club, directed by Nikki Scherer, was also awarded a Spirit of Youth Award for taking their play, which shared a message of peace, on tour to neighhalf, the board emerged and announced that Brawner had received a "positive evaluation" and had been offered and accepted a contract extension to June 2014. Board President Betsy Brennan added that no changes were made to the current contract.

The Nome Board of Education will meet again on Tuesday, January 24 in a work session with topics to include: budget timeline, assumptions/goals for budget and a strategic plan report. Brawner explained that the budget discussion would most likely include the topics of student/teacher ratios and future support of programs and administrative support positions.

Hearing of Delegations/Individ-

Chick Trainor, a substitute for Nome Public Schools, expressed concerns regarding students threatening permanent or temporary employees. Trainor offered the school board potential suggestions to deter students from following through on threats made during school to personnel.

Policy Updates

Two policies passed a first reading. Both were updates recommended by AASB (Association of Alaska School Boards).

The first, BP4111.2 Legal Status Requirement, added text stating the district would verify identity and employment eligibility and would discontinue employment of an individual upon knowledge that he or she was no longer lawfully authorized to work in the United States.

The second, BP 4030 Nondiscrimination in Employment, added "genetic information" to the list of possibilities an employee could not be discriminated against or harassed. Superintendent evaluation

Nanooks boys extend home winning streak at Subway Showdown

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Nanooks continue to make sure opponents know that the Den of the Mighty Nanooks is indeed home sweet home. The Nanooks boys basketball squad extended their home winning streak to 45 games with three victories over the past weekend at the Subway Showdown. However, the victories did not come easy for the Nanooks for much of the weekend.

In the first game, the Nanooks dominated, defeating Point Hope 50-28. Tyler Eide and Nathan Blandford did their usual scoring, both in double figures. But the big story of the game was senior forward Jens Irelan who also scored in double figures and was the big third scoring threat the Nanooks were waiting for this season.

"I think you have to have a third scorer, and Irelan is the guy that has to be our third scorer as a veteran player," said Pat Callahan, head coach of the Nanooks.

In the second and third games of the tournament, it was not quite the same kind of a game for the Nanooks. Both the Homer Mariners and the Bethel Warriors took the Nanooks down to the wire, but both teams were unable to break the home winning streak. The Bethel Warriors, who had put up 84 points against Point Hope the previous day faced the Nanooks in the final game of the tournament with lots of confidence. Led by scorers Austin Miller and Theodore Naneng with 25 and 24 points, the Warriors did all they could but fell just short to Nome. Blandford had a game high 30 points, including 20 in the second half. Also, Eide scored an additional 27 points. Zach Sullivan and Jens Irelan had 10 points a piece.

Again, the story of the weekend for the Nanooks was their defense to go along with the scoring. Coach Callahan prides his coaching on the defensive end, and the Nanooks have displayed it on the court so far this

"It's not always going to come easy and you have to earn them," said Callahan.

Nathan Blandford and Tyler Eide made the all tournament team over the weekend and Eide was named the tournament's most valuable player for the boys.

The Nanooks boys now move to a great 9-1 on the season and look to continue their winning streak in Cordova this weekend.

Lady Nanooks sweep Subway Showdown

By Stephen Palmatier

The Den of the Mighty Nanooks was the site of the Subway Showdown this past weekend where the Nome Lady Nanooks basketball team was able to come away with three victories in three games, all on consecutive days. The Nome ladies defeated teams from Bethel, Homer and Point Hope.

In the first game, the Nome ladies defeated the Bethel Lady Warriors, 51-38. Starting junior point guard Dylan Johnson had a game high of 20 points and starting forward Devynn Johnson added an additional 17 points.

The story of the game and the weekend however was the advantage that the Nanooks had in height compared to each of the other three teams. Nome's height advantage made them able to outrebound teams, both on the defensive and offensive ends.

In the second game against the Homer Lady Mariners, the Nanooks were simply dominant as the Mariners were unable to get anything done on the offensive end. The Lady Mariners, who certainly had some offensive flaws, were greatly exposed with the defense of Nome.

The third and final game on Saturday was the key game of the weekend for the ladies as they took on Point Hope. Point Hope and Nome came into the game both with two victories as both teams looked very well coached and efficient. Point Hope had come into the tournament with only five players, which made every player have to play every minute of the tournament. This proved to be the difference in the end as a player from Point Hope fouled out in the last minutes of the game creating a 5 on 4 scenario for Nome. The fatigue of Point Hope's players was evident in the 4th quarter of the game against a much more rested Nome team that was substituting players throughout the weekend. With this, Nome was able to come away with a close victory capping off a terrific weekend.

"We're happy to have the wins this weekend," said Don Stiles, head coach of the Lady Nanooks. "We're still taking steps from being a good team to a great team, and this weekend we took those steps," said Stiles.

Perhaps what makes the Lady Nanooks the great team down the road was the emergence of Shayla Johnson as a scorer. Shayla, a starting guard for the ladies, is known as a hustler and the best defender on the team. However, in one half she put in 15 points showing that she can have the hot hand also on offense.

"Shayla has always been an exciting player to watch," said Stiles. "We give her a free reign because she likes to follow the ball around," said Stiles.

With the production already given from Devynn and Dylan Johnson with points every night, the addition of Shayla Johnson as a third scorer could be a big boost for the ladies throughout the season.

The Lady Nanooks now move to 7-3 on the season with the three victories and look to continue their winning streak when they head to the Cordova Tournament this Thursday through Saturday.

NSHC's new CEO considers himself a consultative leader

By Diana Haecker

Norton Sound Health Corporation's new chief executive and president has been on the job for only a month, but Deven Parlikar already got a taste of health care realities in Nome. "We in the lower 48 have so many assumptions about rural health care, but you don't know until you see the conditions under which quality health care is delivered here in rural Alaska," Parlikar said in a recent interview with The Nome Nugget.

Parlikar, 45, was hired by NSHC to fill the top leadership position He started to work at NSHC on November 15, taking over the reins from interim CEO Roy Agloinga, who continues to work as the corporation's chief operating officer.

Parlikar is from San Diego and said he didn't really know what Nome is all about or what snow looks like. He said he is adjusting, pointing with a laugh to snow cleats strapped to his loafers. Parlikar is looking back on an 18-year career in the health care field mostly in California and New Mexico. He has a bachelor degree in economics and a Master of Business Administration.

He has worked with tribal community health centers funded by Indian Health Service and was president and CEO of the Indian Health Care Center in San Diego for ten years, a consortium of 17 tribes, structured much like Norton Sound. "When I worked there I thought we were very rural, but now I have a new appreciation of what 'rural' means," he said.

He added that he was amazed and humbled to see the quality care delivered at NSHC. By the same token, Parlikar said that Alaska is much more sophisticated in terms of how regional health corporations are structured. "Also, the fact that there are 231 Alaska tribes under one compact gives them incredible negotiating power with the federal government," he said. "I wish the lessons from Alaska could be taught to the tribes in the lower 48, as far as coming together for a united purpose goes," Parlikar said.

Parlikar defaulted into a career in health care as he started out to become a CPA. "I was not CPA material and I ended up failing the CPA exam a few times," Parlikar said.

An opportunity with a large health care center came up, he said, and thus started what he called a "love affair" with health care.

Parlikar has moved to Nome, but decided to not relocate his entire family, consisting of his wife and three children, 14,10 and 8 years of age. He explained that his ten-yearold daughter is a brain cancer survivor. She has been diagnosed with cancer at age 3 and still is a patient at the Children's Hospital in San Diego. "For me it's hard to make the decision to bring her here and should something go wrong, there really isn't any access to critical care when it comes to pediatric oncology," Parlikar said. "We made the decision as a family that I come up here and work and then go to visit them once a month for an extended weekend."

Parlikar offered a glimpse into his personal life when he said that the job at NSHC came at the right time.

"One of the reasons why this job is such a big opportunity for me is, after my daughter got sick, I gave up on everything," Parlikar said. "I was so consumed with taking care of her that for a while I defined myself as a caregiver. I see this job at Norton Sound as a way for me to go back and rediscover who I am. It almost feels like Norton Sound came to my rescue as I re-engage professionally.

The new president comes at a time of change at NSHC. The new hospital is nearly finished and the corporation gears up to transition in the fall time to the new facility at Gold Hill. A consulting firm based in Los Angeles was hired to plan and facilitate the move, to make the transition smooth while health care services are still being rendered. NSHC leadership also set up committees to make the transition as smooth as possible. "It's going well, but no matter how well we plan, when you move, contingencies are going to come up,' Parlikar said. He said his role is to anticipate these contingencies and to have some plans of actions in place to address these issues as they arise.

When asked what his goals are, he answered, "I want to say improve patient care, but that's not a goal, it's a continuing process, it's a journey not a destination." Integrating services and becoming efficient are goals near the top of his list. As the corporation's strategic plan calls for a goal of "becoming a premier health care system globally," Parlikar has three years to set his mark.

Barely on the job, he met with colleagues at the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium discussing workforce development, recruitment and retention strategies. He also went to Washington, D.C. to meet with the National Organization on Fetal Alcohol Syndrome - he sits on NOFAS' board of directors. "There is a huge issue with FAS exposure in this community," Parlikar said. In order to address the staggering numbers of kids with FAS, Parlikar said that he wants to implement NOFAS' online curriculum to train providers in Nome and the villages with tried and tested methodologies for the early detection of FAS.

In general, federally funded health care organizations are in distress anticipating spending cuts that impact their capabilities to deliver health care. The future of federal spending is looking bleak, and Parlikar suggests a mix of tightening NSHC's own spending, saving costs and looking to supplement federal funding with sources that include foundations. Parlikar said NSHC needs to start some "house cleaning" from within, to figure out how to be more efficient with health care and energy costs. "I am not of the philosophy to go to IHS with my hand extended every time we run out of money," Parlikar said. "The goal is to create efficiencies within so that we live within our means and save something for a rainy day."

He encourages the board of directors to look at foundations that fund organizations like NSHC. "Because our dependence on federal funding has to be tempered with the reality that funding is compromised and we need to make sure that we have other avenues that we pursue," Parlikar

As for his management style, Parlikar considers himself to be a handsoff consultative leader. "I work with professionals, who are very well qualified and committed in their own realm, so I don't consider myself a manager. I see myself a consultative leader to help facilitate things that need to occur but on the flipside if I' m given reason to not trust someone, I will micromanage and make sure that things are done right. Ultimately, I believe that anything we do wrong is my responsibility. Anything we do right, the managers can take credit for it," he said.

When should I take medication for fever?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Patients often ask about the best treatment for a fever.

You may be surprised to learn that in most cases, fever is not the problem; fever is the treatment. In fact, many studies now show that lowering a fever with medication may pro-

Children over three months of age and all adults rarely need to take medication to lower the temperature if a fever remains below 102° F (38.9° C). In this case, a little rest and drinking plenty of fluids is usually enough to reduce the fever. Further treatment may be required if the fever is associated with pain (ear, throat, stomach or joint pain), long an illness.

Most "common cold" viruses and many bacteria have a hard time reproducing in a warm environment. Therefore, during an infection the human body turns up the heat in order to slow the growth of infecting organisms. This allows time for the immune system to fight off the germ.

Fever is a sign that the body is fighting off an infection, but fever itself is not a disease. In fact, fever itself is unlikely to cause damage below 104° F.

Determining when to lower a temperature for comfort's sake or when to seek treatment for the underlying illness requires a little guidance. The appropriate action depends on a person's age and the extent of the fever.

Infants who are three months old and younger with a temperature above 100.4° F (38° C) should always see a physician. At this young age, fever may be the only sign of a serious illness, like meningitis, even if the child is otherwise behaving lethargy, a stiff neck, or other signs of serious disease, or when the temperature remains elevated over three

When a fever rises above 102° F (38.9° C), medication may be helpful at reducing the temperature and, more importantly, provide relief for the aches and pains that often accompany a higher fever.

Medication to lower a fever can be purchased over the counter. But a quick visit to the store for a simple medication is often made complex by an array of options on the medicine aisle with drugs packaged in colorful boxes printed with strange names followed by tantalizing claims of efficacy.

If you look closely at the fine print on each of the boxes, you will notice that most of the medications contain the same basic ingredients. The goal is to find the ingredient that best treats your symptoms without interfering with your other medical conditions or medications you may be taking for these other conditions.

There are basically four medications available for treating a fever: acetaminophen (Tylenol); ibuprofen (Motrin or Advil); naproxen (Aleve); or aspirin (Bayer).

Your doctor may recommend one of these medications over another, but usually this has little to do with whether a medication works better than the others. Each medication provides about the same level of relief as the others. However, in some cases a medication may be dangerous for certain patients.

Aspirin should not be given to children under age 18 because it may cause Reye's Syndrome, a rare disease affecting the liver and central nervous system.

Most pediatricians recommend ibuprofen for children over 6 months old because it reduces the inflammation that causes the symptoms of fever, aches, and fatigue without increasing the risk of Reve's syndrome.

Ibuprofen and naproxen both work well for adults but should not be taken by people with severe asthma or peptic ulcer disease because these medications prevent the relaxation of airways and increase acid production in the stom-

Ibuprofen and naproxen also block an enzyme that controls blood pressure by changing blood flow through the kidneys. Therefore, people with high blood pressure and people with underlying kidney disease or advanced diabetes should exercise caution when taking these medications.

Of these four medications, acetaminophen is the safest to use during pregnancy. Ibuprofen, naproxen, and aspirin should be avoided during pregnancy, especially when the mother is close to term due to negative effects these medications may have on the baby's blood cells and heart vessels.

Nursing mothers may use acetaminophen, ibuprofen, or naproxen, but they should avoid aspirin, which crosses into the breast milk and may cause problems in nursing infants.

Acetaminophen is processed by the liver and may be dangerous for people with underlying liver disease or those consuming excess amounts of alcohol.

The most concerning misuse of acetaminophen comes from the fact that it is found in many over-thecounter medications. People who take several different medications in order to treat various symptoms may risk harming their liver by failing to notice that acetaminophen is a primary ingredient in several different medications. Reading labels is important.

Remember that all medications have side effects, and the fact that a medication is available "over-thecounter" does not guarantee safety.

Also remember that good nutrition and relative rest go a long way in shortening the duration of an illness. Medications have a place in helping people through times of sickness, but the idea is to take the least amount of medication needed to reduce undesirable symptoms.

Contact your doctor if fever is accompanied by signs of a serious infection, or if you have concerns about which fever-reducing medication is appropriate for you or a family member.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC WORKSHOP REGARDING INPUT FOR DEVELOPMENT OF STATE OF ALASKA ELECTION DISTRICT PRECINCT REGULATIONS

The State of Alaska, Office of the Lieutenant Governor, Division of Elections, will be hosting one public workshop regarding proposed changes to the regulations governing election district precincts following the 2010 census and ensuing redistricting plan.

These regulations changes are being proposed in response to the state's redistricting plan, currently being litigated in In Re: 2011 Redistricting Cases, 4FA-11-2209 Cl. A formal notice and public comment period under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) will be held for the regulation package later in 2012, after the aforementioned litigation has been resolved and the redistricting plan has been finalized. This workshop is in addition to—and NOT a substitute for—the APA notice and comment process that will precede the adoption of these regulations.

All interested persons are invited to attend by telephone at 1-855-463-5009 (outside of Juneau), 463-5009 (Juneau area) or in person at the Anchorage Legislative Information Office, 716 W 4th Avenue, Room 220, Anchorage, Alaska. The workshop will be held on February 13, 2012 from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. If you are unable to attend the workshop, feel free to submit your input or ideas to us in writing via mail, fax, or email by close of business on February 13, 2012 at P.O. Box 110017, Juneau AK 99811-0017, 907-465-3203(fax) or elections@alaska.gov. All input, ideas, and statements received will be public records subject to disclosure under the Alaska Public Records Act and available for inspection at the State of Alaska, Division of Elections, 240 Main Street, Suite 400, Juneau, Alaska.

If you are a person with a disability who needs a special accommodation or a person who requires language assistance or translation services in order to participate in this process, please contact Becky Weimer at 907-465-4611 no later than January 24, 2012 to ensure that any necessary accommodations can be provided.

A working draft of the proposed precinct changes and attendant maps is available online at www.elections.alaska.gov.

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION - The U.S. Coast Guard cutter Healy under command of Captain Beverly Havlik escorted the Russian tanker Renda for 350 miles through thick sea ice to facilitate Nome's first winter fuel delivery in history. Bonanza Fuel contractors failed to deliver gasoline and diesel in the fall, prior to freeze-up.

the product is safely up at the fuel tank farm. We have a long way to go, keeping a keen eye on safety and bringing our mission to a conclusion." Ostebo is commander of the 17th Coast Guard District.

Alaska Sen. Lisa Murkowski and about 20 state and national level press people flew into Nome Sunday with other dignitaries to see the proj-

Warmer temperatures around 0° F and the spectacle of a Russian tanker with the Healy closer than ever to shore have brought out local spectators over the past two days.

Gary Samuelson lives on the road to the port and can see the ships from his home.

"I think that yesterday I saw everyone in Nome drive by my house at least once to take a look. Saturday, I heard the Healy crash its way into the harbor with ice breaking and knocking around. The Healy was out there doing turns and sounding like it was stirring the big margarita."

State officials took the opportunity to underscore a need for the United States to build more icebreakers to meet increased commerce in northern oceans, especially near and involving Alaska.

"It is important for the country to know and understand our role as an arctic nation," Sen. Lisa Murkowski said in a press briefing Sunday. "It is not just Nome that is an arctic community. It is not just Alaska that is an arctic state. If we are to move around as an arctic nation, we are going to need some icebreakers. The Healy has demonstrated just what that means. This is a mission that this state, this nation will remember for a long time.'

Alaska's lieutenant governor, Mead Treadwell, also said the winter fuel transfer points to the need for more icebreakers.

"The nation does need more polar class icebreakers. Because the Arctic Ocean is becoming more accessible the shipping is becoming much more widespread and we need to have a Coast Guard mission here."

The ships paired up at Dutch Harbor and headed north Jan 2 after Vitus Marine fought to bring the Renda through weather, ice and maritime laws in four languages. They sought and received a waiver of the 1920 Jones Act, a U.S. law that requires ships carrying cargo between American ports to be built in America and operated by American crews.

The fuel delivery resulted from more than a month's planning and support by many state and federal agencies as well as local stakehold-

"It is a plan with a thousand moving parts that get tweaked day by Jason Evans, board chairman for Sitnasuak said. Staff from Sitnasuak and Vitus Marine and other stakeholders in safe and efficient delivery are participating each morning in USCG coordinated conference calls that include USCG in Juneau, Sitka, Kodiak, state DEC, NOAA and National Weather service, Port of Nome, City of Nome, federal Fish and Wildlife and Alaska Marine Pi-

"Anytime you do something that hasn't been done before, it takes a tremendous amount of time and coordination," Evans said, "If it has to be done again, it will seem a thousand times simpler."

That several out-of-town reporters have compared the fuel delivery to a dangerous relay trip when 20 mushers and about 150 sled dogs relayed life saving diphtheria toxin over 600 miles from Fairbanks to Nome has some coffee circles snorting, but entertained.

There is a statue of Balto, lead dog hero of the 1925 serum run, in New York City's Central Park. Maybe we should have a statue of an icebreaker and a Russian tanker in our town park," Jim Stimpfle, Nome resident, laughed. It's great entertainment—the Ice Circus Maximus.'

GETTING FREE-The USCG Healy freed itself from the ice around 1 p.m. Friday afternoon and worked into the darkness to free the Renda that was intentionally frozen into place while a transfer team ran 1.35 million gallons of fuel into storage tanks to top off Bonanza Fuel's winter supply. The ships headed south Saturday morning around 10 a. m.

Bye-bye Renda; bye-bye Healy

The USCG Cutter Healy crunched into the mist off Nome Saturday morning tailed by the Russianflagged fuel tanker Renda following successful delivery of 1.35 million gallons of fuel to top off the community's retail winter fuel supply.

"I am extremely proud of the way our partners and the marine industry worked as a collaborative team along with the Coast Guard to get the needed fuel to the residents of Nome," Rear Adm. Thomas Ostebo, Coast Guard District 17 commander said in a statement.

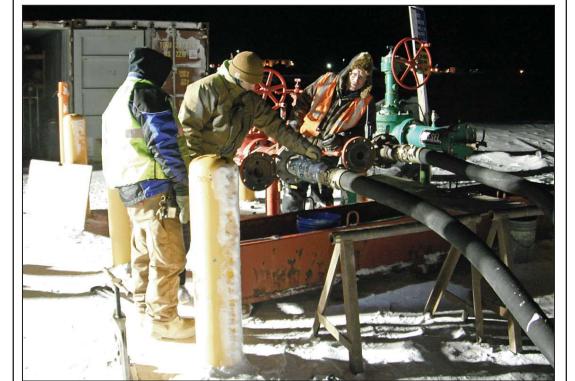

A slush of broken ice delayed the pair's departure overnight after the Healy sawed the Renda out of its frozen-in position before spectators who watched the process all Satur-

"The icebreaker goes through the thick shore-fast ice and kind of chunks it all up like a slurry, like in a blender. It makes a blocky slush. As the Renda tries to go through it, the slush all goes to the surface like a trap," Mark Smith, CEO Vitus Marine, explained. "As the Renda tries to go through it, it's pushing this fluff of mashed potatoes and it can't

Crowley: No rise in fuel prices

By Sandra L. Medearis

One shoe has dropped on fuel prices. During the Russian-flagged fuel tanker drama, consumers looking seaward have been entertained, but they have been asking all along -what will Crowley do?

That is, would Crowley Fuel Distribution's Nome gas pumps and heating fuel zing up in price if Bonanza Fuel raised its price banner high to recover the cost of floating in its retail supply through winter's ice pack? Bonanza is a major supplier of vehicle fuel and heating fuel.

Monday, Crowley's vice president of sales and distribution, Bob Cox, had an answer. "It's been pretty consistent in the past that we change fuel prices when our cost of fuel changes. The new fuel that came in was for Bonanza, not Crowley, so I'm not planning to make any pricing changes at this time," he said. The only caveat I would have is if for any reason, the way prices go, if Bonanza made a pricing change that resulted in Crowley selling a whole lot of fuel, it might be possible that by the end of winter our supplies might be running out, then we might have to be flying in some fuel.

Everybody is talking about fuel. Everybody is talking about continued butt-gripping weather. Weather is robbing fuel tanks this winter. Bonanza hasn't dropped the other shoe following their first-ever tanker delivery. Jason Evans, chairman of Sitnasuak Native Corp. said last week

Fate of Rock Creek mine still uncertain

Other gold miners emerge to run the mine before reclamation process starts

By Diana Haecker

Last Friday the clock ran out on the public to comment on the Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources draft closure and reclamation plan of the shuttered Rock Creek mine. Only a few comments made the 15-day comment period afforded to the public to review and digest the information presented in the draft plan.

Large mine coordinator Steve Mc-Groarty with the DNR's large mine team said that he received comment from six people and three requests to extend the comment period. However, the extension requests were denied. "We felt that 15 days was an adequate time to review the information and we wanted to make certain that the public process would not unduly delay the reclamation timeline," McGroarty said.

In order to complete the reclamation process as proposed, the first phase - dewatering the tailings storage facility, temporarily covering the tailings and breaching the TSF dam – is supposed to be accomplished before break-up.

The six comments came from Nome residents Jim and Chris Rowe, Austin Ahmasuk, Sue Steinacher, a Fairbanks resident and two comments from Stuart Levit and Dr. Dave Chambers with the Center for Science in Public Participation as well as comments from Fairbanks resident and miner Mike Young. Mike Young is a director of the newly formed mining company called Bering Gold Group that is trying to purchase the Rock Creek mine. Young commented to DNR saying that he opposes the mine closure. "It is our understanding that a viable and experienced mining group has emerged that is willing to reopen the mine and save the jobs and other benefits to our community," Young wrote, referring to the Bering Gold Group. His comment continues to say, "The unfulfilled social contact to our fellow Alaskans, the people of Nome, and the Natives groups in the area and to the people of Alaska by Nova Gold and its subsidiary Alaska Gold, is a bitter pill to swallow [....]" In way of introduction, Young told The Nome Nugget that his father had mined near Granite Mountain at Bear Creek and that his grandfather had mined in Nome. According to Young he didn't learn that the Rock Creek mine is for sale until last fall. Since then his Bering Gold Group has put together a team of mining engineers, geologists and financiers to purchase the mine. But major players are not won over.

The Bering Strait Native Corporation and Sitnasuak Inc. as landowners are in discussions with NovaGold Resources about the potential acquisition of the entire Rock Creek site. BSNC president and CEO Gail Schubert updated The Nome Nugget in an email and said, "We are still in discussions with Nova Gold, and still evaluating the financial viability of reopening the Rock Creek mine. If we determine that operating the Rock Creek mine is not a prudent business decision at this time, we are comfortable that the provisions of the Reclamation Plan adequately

Hi Nancy

I just wanted to write and say, since living in your community some 33 years ago, your recent storm(s) remind me of the time one fall when we had 6 blizzards hit Nome in about as many weeks. One after another. I think it was 1978 but I am not sure. I checked the archives, they don't go back that far!

I worked for the FAA at the airport as an Air Traffic Controller. Best!

Robin Craviotto Rathdrum, Idaho

Hi Nancy,

I just read this week's issue of the Nugget and wanted to compliment you on the excellent photos and news coverage of the fuel delivery. What an undertaking! I was a bit disappointed, though, that you did not include pictures of the Renda captain and other Russians involved. It would be nice to put a face to our western neighbors who so willingly stepped forward to the call. It is a heart-warming thought that people from another country are willing to help Americans in need.

Things Will Be Changing

These past few weeks have brought Nome into the limelight. We may not want to be there, but nevertheless we are. The Arctic is open-

The oil leases are the instruments of change and the oil companies mean business. Shell Oil is building its own icebreakers to help their tankers navigate through the Arctic ice. We are hoping to build more tankers for our Coast Guard. The presence of the Coast Guard will be increasingly important on the high seas of the Arctic. The cargo and shipping lanes will be open year-round. Are we ready? Hardly. Where are our plans? Our governor trashed our Coastal Zone Management plans. Will our legislature pick up the challenge? Are we willing to get ready for big changes? Is our Port of Nome ready to be in operation all year? Are we prepared for the inevitable environmental disasters? Yes, the recent exercise in fuel delivery was just the tip of the iceberg. Nome has to sit down at the table and put some long-range plans into operation. We are not to be left behind in the dust. Nome must be ready for a sea change in Arctic transportation policy.

Illegitimus non carborundum

We have recently been made aware that there apparently is considerable interest among certain individuals and companies in securing a position that will allow them to participate in the potential reopening of the Rock Creek mine. BSNC and Nova Gold have been working together for many months in the review of the Closure Plan, while concurrently, BSNC has also been analyzing whether it is economically feasible to reopen the Mine. We are very aware that an operating mine in the Region would be an economic boost to Nome and our surrounding communities.

The issues surrounding reopening the mine are complex, as are the factors involved in the proper closure of the Mine. BSNC is committed to ensuring that the environmental concerns associated with both of these adequately options are addressed. When BSNC and Nova Gold determine which path will be the final one for the Rock Creek mine, we will notify you, our shareholders and other residents of the Region. Thanks very much.

Sincerely, Gail R. Schubert President and CEO Bering Straits Native Corporation

Dear Editor.

People seem to be up in arms about photos in the news of girls kissing girls. One even wrote in letters to the editor about kissing their horse after a long ride. I ran the Iditarod four times with my team of French Poodles and the word on the trail was that you have to be really close with your dogs to do well on the race. Well, I don't care how close you have to be with your dogs, I am still not going to French kiss my French poodles.

Dear Editor:

The video of the interview with Captain Havlik done by Diane Haecker is outstanding! The aerial pictures of the Healy and Renda and Nome set to music interspersed between the interview make this my favorite video of this whole story...and I have been watching every video I can find from Youtube to official Coast Guard videos and there are many very good ones. But I love this one and have watched it over and over. As I have been closely following this story (I am the mother of one of the officers on Healy) I had been trying to piece together and visualize the position of both ships in relation to the Nome harbor and shore, how far the hoses would need to be run, and what Nome looks like. This showed everything so well, the interview was very well-done and interesting and informative, and the music is perfect. Please share my highest compliments to Diana Haecker who I believe created it.

Thank you, Norette St. Pierre Two Rivers, WI 54241

Northern Waters task force proposes changes to Arctic policy

By Diana Haecker

How will Alaska deal with the unprecedented pressure of an international race to extract the Arctic's resources of minerals, oils and gas? What policies should be in place to protect Alaska and her residents' interest multinational corporations plot the development of northern shipping routes, of expanding commercial fisheries north and to discover the Arctic for tourism?

Faced with these questions and more that come in the wake of Arctic warming and diminishing summer sea ice, the Alaska Legislature established the Alaska Northern Waters Task Force in 2010 to come up with answers and to sketch out a roadmap of how Alaska should position itself to benefit from the economic boom that is bound to come along with new development, but also to balance it with sustaining and protecting local communities and the environment.

Last week, after absorbing expert testimonies in ten hearings held across the state, the task force came out with a preliminary report on its findings. The final report is due to be released on January 30.

One of the top recommendations is to meaningfully involve Alaskans in Arctic policy and outer continental shelf developments. "Many local officials, government tribal government representatives and individuals expressed a need for timelier, more frank and more thorough information from state and federal authorities regarding policies and activities off Alaska's coast," the report says. This should be remedied by structured communications and consultations particularly with those who most likely will be impacted.

A second recommendation responds to the fact that Alaska is not prepared for the onslaught of ship traffic, oil and gas interests jockeying for position to exploit the Arctic's riches and for the fishing industry to chase migrating fish stocks up north. "The State of Alaska has only just begun to grapple with the challenges and opportunities developing in the far north," the task force report reads. The task force finds that the state needs to get involved and needs to assume a leadership role in the development of policies. The task force is pressing for the creation of a commission to develop a comprehensive state strategy for the Arctic.

When the Arctic was merely a cold, dark and inhospitable environment covered by multi-year ice, Arctic governance was easy. Now that the sea ice diminishes and the possibilities of vast oil and gas field developments arise, it becomes painfully clear that governance structures are inadequate. First, the task force recommends that the Alaska State legislature and the State of Alaska urge the U.S. Senate to ratify the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. The task force also recommends for the U.S. to develop a comprehensive Arctic strategy that should balance national and Alaska state interests "so that commitments to safeguard the environment and the wellbeing of the region's communities and cultures accompany all plans to advance economic development," says the report.

oil and Concerning development, the task force recommends developing framework to share data for leasing permitting decisions. It recommends that the state and the U.S. government work on continued improvement for the industry and the government to prevent, contain, control or clean up spills in the Arctic. It also recommends that the University of Alaska establish an oil spill research center.

As marine traffic through the Bering Strait increases noticeably, the task force urges the state and the U.S. government to work with the international community and finalize the Polar Code for ships "operating in Arctic waters and examine whether to establish an offshore routing scheme circumpolar marine traffic, including through the Aleutians," the report says.

With warming waters and diminishing sea ice, commercially fished species are migrating north. For now, the North Pacific Fishery Management Council put a moratorium on commercial fisheries north of the Bering Strait. Not enough information is available to make good decisions on whether or not to allow commercial fishing. The task force report recommends greatly increasing fishery-related research and to keep up negotiations regarding trans-boundary accords with other nations.

The onslaught of human activity in the Arctic, may it be oil and gas development, fisheries, tourism or shipping traffic, highlights the need for more arctic infrastructure. The task force recommends to forward base the U.S. Coast Guard in the Arctic and to fund construction of additional icebreakers. It also recommends developing deep-draft ports and safe harbors in northern

The task force report also points to the need for increased research. Climate change is profoundly changing the Arctic, transforming not only the complex ecosystem but is also bound to have effects on the socioeconomic realities. "Under these circumstances the need for wide-ranging scientific research and monitoring in the Arctic has never been more pressing," the report says. The task force recommends that the state and the federal government identify priorities for Arctic research, to improve the exchange of research information and data, to increase long term monitoring of the Arcticincluding routine surveys of key chemical, physical and biological parameters of the Beaufort and Chukchi seas and the coastal plains.

The task force was chaired by Rep. Reggie Joule (D-Kotzebue). Other members of the 11-member panel included Nome Mayor Denise Michels, alternate member Senator Donnie Olson (D-Golovin) and former North Slope Borough Mayor Edward Itta. U.S. Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo served as the federal liaison.

protect the interests of both SNC as surface owner, and BSNC as subsurface owner," Schubert wrote. She added that BSNC has engaged a team of mining experts to assist with its evaluation of reopening the Rock Creek mine and has been doing this for the past several months. Sitnasuak CEO David Hoffman told The Nome Nugget that Sitnasuak is taking the backseat in the negotiations.

LOCAL

When Bering Gold Group entered the picture, NovaGold apparently tossed the ball into BSNC's court and the Bering Gold Group tried to convince BSNC that they want to buy Rock Creek.

BSNC's Matt Ganley, vice president of Resources and External Affairs, said in an email to The Nome Nugget that "Bering Gold would be put on a list of individuals and companies that have inquired about the future of the mine." Ganley also wrote that BSNC is not interested in working with the Bering Gold Group at this time.

Ron Rimelman, vice President for Environment, Health, Safety and Sustainability with NovaGold Resources said he could not comment on the talks between BSNC and NovaGold, citing confidentiality agree-

Other comments

Chris and Jim Rowe commented on the closure plan and asked questions that were not addressed in the document. "How can we determine the safety of the drinking water in our wells that are within five miles of the TSF?" the Rowes asked. "How often do we need to test these wells? Is there a state program for well testing that is economical for local residents of Nome? What contaminants should we be testing for?"

Levit, with the Center for Science in Public Participation, CSP2 for short, questioned if it is prudent to breach the tailings dam when there is a possibility that the mine could reopen. "Patching the TSF dam could lead to unanticipated seepage problems through and around a repaired HDPE liner on a reconstructed dam," Levit wrote. He recommended that "the tailings dam should not be breached without an accompanying commitment to permanently close the mine." Levit also said that there would be a reasonable likelihood that cyanide and other contaminants could be released into groundwater from both the tailings facility and the pit. He recommended to monitor an injection well at least once a year for 30 years to make sure that long term contamination to groundwater is detected and could be treated. Other recommendations include that surface water should be monitored for ten years, and continue at representative sites for a minimum of 30 years. Levit also commented on the clean up of equipment, tanks and pipelines that came into contact with toxic materials. He wrote that "...a standard should be established for notably hazardous or toxic (to human health and the environment) materials to ensure that they are fully neutralized - and that neutralizing or decontaminating materials are not overused... A good example is cvanide, which even after decontamination often leaves cyanide residues in the discharge that could persist in sufficient quantities to be hazardous, particularly to wildlife.

Dr. Dave Chambers, also with CSP2, expressed two major concerns one being that the TSF dam shouldn't be breached unless the mine is to permanently close. He also took exception to the plan to place tailings that went through the cyanidation process in the pit, unlined and unprotected from seeping into the groundwater. "This is not an appropriate waste disposal plan," Chambers wrote. He recommended that DNR require geochemical sampling of the tailings to make sure that they won't lead to leaching contaminants into the groundwater and/or to encapsulate the tailings in a liner. "It is disappointing that DNR appears to be sacrificing caution for the sake of expediency (and cost savings in water treatment for AGC) in forging ahead on the reclamation plan,' Chambers wrote. Chambers has been involved in commenting on the mine since it was first proposed.

DNR's Steve McGroarty said that the department would review, evaluate and develop responses to the comments received. The DNR will then issue a final plan. McGroarty said DNR does not plan to hold a public meeting in Nome to present the final plan and to field questions.

that even with the 1.4 million gallons hauled in by tanker to avoid highpriced fuel flights, continual extreme weather might have him supplementing fuel by airplane, just the same. Evans said Bonanza would be able to determine their price structure

In his report to Nome Common Council Monday evening, John K. Handeland, utilities director, said that during the weather, the system demand has stayed near and did cross the six-megawatt mark, estimated to be Nome's outer limit power load.

We normally see something like a high of 5.7, 5.8 megawatts. Hitting six megawatts is abnormal," he said. "It's the highest we've ever seen. I think boilers are running more and people are running supplemental heaters.

This required operating a backup generator in the old power plant to complement the 5.2 MW Wartsila generator in the new plant.

Handeland said that the Nome Joint Utility System generator fuel inventory on 12/31/2011 stood at 1.5 million gallons.

mile journey to open water through ice up to a yard thick, nature smiled on the return journey—they thought. "The north and the east winds have pushed the ice away from the Yukon—Kuskokwin Delta [100 miles south of Nome], so it looks like there is 100 to 150 miles of lead [open water] opening up. They are optimistic that if they can get away from shore fast ice they can make some rapid progress, Smith said over the weekend.

That was not to be.

The strong northerly winds closed off the large lead offshore the Yukon Delta coastline, Smith said Monday. Nevertheless, a map with yellow tacks showed the ships making headway about 120 nautical miles south of Nome. "Winds and currents are assisting in the southerly transit because they are pushing the ice flows south." Smith Smith, on the way out of town, stopped to josh with the Bee-Ess Table at Polar Café.

"It's pretty incredible what happened out there," Dave MacDowell said. "It was a bad situation, but the town sure enjoyed it. I filmed for three hours when they were getting ready to go."

The guys assured Smith he would be welcome at the round Bee-Ess Table without invitation when he came back to Nome.

'Not to fluff up my own skirt, but I'd be a natural," Smith said.

"If you've got a shiny reputation, this isn't the place to sit," MacDowell countered.

Smith on Saturday thought the ships would be home soon. The Renda is headed back to Vladivostok: the Healy is tentatively scheduled for Dutch Harbor.

"It's all about ice conditions, but once the Renda is free of the ice pack, they are probably 10 days away from homeport in Vladivostok," he said. All in all, the transfer team unloaded 290,000 gallons of gasoline from Dutch Harbor and 1,062,000 gallons of ultra low sulfur diesel fuel from South Korea. The gasoline and diesel flowed 1,400 feet from the tanker Renda through four-inch twin hoses laid across the ice to the Port of Nome fuel dock. At one point, gasoline flow had to be held up as the transfer team replaced a hose with a blister the size of a quarter, and then allowed to resume without further incident.

The MV Renda is a 371-foot, Russian-registered ice-class vessel with a double hull.

U.S.Coast Guard Cutter Healy is a 420-foot ice-breaker class boat with the ability to pass through 4.5 feet of ice at 4 knots and the ability to break through up to 8 feet of ice by backing up and ramming.

Council looks at money in pull tab jars

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council met at its restored time of 7 p.m. and tore through an agenda to finish public business at 7:25 p.m. before going into executive session to discuss labor issues including Josie Bahnke's city manager contract.

Budget amendments for first reading provided the bulk of business. The panel unanimously voted all five amending ordinances to second reading, hearing and final passage at the next regular Council meeting Feb.

These spending plans undergoing mid-year adjustments are: general fund municipal budget, construction capital projects, special revenue fund budget, capital projects fund, and Port of Nome operating plan.

In business of interest to property owners, the Council set the date of the Board of Equalization for Feb. 2 through Feb. 4. The Board of Equalization comprises Council members and is a time for property owners to ask for adjustments on tax bills if they think a mistake has been made.

Sales tax on "rippies"

In more business of interest to property owners, pull tab parlors and charitable organizations:

The Council has been meeting in work sessions to tweak the City of Nome's sales tax ordinance. They held the most recent session last week. Notably, and a bigger adjustment than a tweak, the panel has considered a change in the way pull tab games would be taxed. Currently, the City takes its 5 percent sales tax off the entire amount generated by the sales on a box of pull tabs. Under the amendment, the city would charge sales tax against the ideal net, the approximate 20 percent that goes to the charity from the sale of each game box. The City is currently realizing annual revenue in the $400,000 range from pull tab sales tax. Under the new formula, that take would diminish to about $63,000, while the money going to the charity would grow. As a result, charities would no longer receive money from the City's budget. Second, to make up around $350,000 in missed revenue, the City would need to cut two mills from the annual spending budget or increase property tax by two mills. Council is working with the City's attorney on the sales tax is-

The Council waived a rental fee of $200 for Old St. Joe's for Kegoayah Kozga Library's staging of a poetry reading by award-winning writer Joan Kane set for Feb. 4 from 4 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Finally, Councilman Stan Andersen applauded Joy Baker, harbor master, for doing her job participating in teamwork of many agencies that got the oil off the Russianflagged tanker Renda and safely into Bonanza Fuel's tank farm.

"We should do a letter thanking Joy Baker," he said. "Not too many other people could do that.'

The Council let Andersen's motion die without a second when he put in a pitch for a donation of $10,000 for the Nome-Golovin Snowmachine Race.

"OK, wait until I get my crowd here," Andersen said.

"Try for $5,000," Councilwoman Mary Knodel suggested.

Nothing doing, Andersen said. Just wait.

Fagerstrom, senior member of NVFD, has served with the brigade for over 45 years.

Ahnangnatoguk trial sees no change in venue for now

By Diana Haecker

A request to move the venue of Al Roby Ahnangnatoguk's trial to Kotzebue or Barrow has been denied. Ahnangnatoguk, 53, is charged with attempted murder and five counts of assault on his sister Brenda Ahnangnatoguk and two other people.

Allegedly, Ahnangnatoguk slashed his sister multiple times with an ulu and shot her. He then tried to kill himself with a gun but was able to walk into Norton Sound's emergency room with a gunshot wound to the chest. The incident took place on August 21, 2011.

Ahnangnatoguk's public defender submitted a motion to move his trial away from Nome to Barrow or Kotzebue, citing the pretrial publicity surrounding the case.

Superior Court Judge Ben Esch denied the motion and said in his order, "The defense has demonstrated that there has been some publicity associated with the case, however, the mere existence of publicity is not determinative..."

Ahnangnatoguk's case is scheduled to go to trial on March 20.

HOOK 'EM UP-Kirsten Bey and team leave the starting line at the Nome Bypass Road in the first sled dog race of the mushing season. The 10 mile race had a 8 dog limit.

Seven teams compete in first Nome Kennel club sled dog race of the season

By Diana Haecker

Seven sled dog teams showed up at the start line for the first eight-dog, 10-mile sled dog race of the 2012 winter season. The race had been postponed from a January 15 date to last Sunday due to adverse trail and weather conditions. Last Sunday, however, weather cooperated and allowed for reasonable race conditions, in single digit degrees temperatures combined with the sting of a slight north wind. The start line was near the city's snow dump access road, making it an ideal spot for racers and spectators to park their cars and watch the action. The trail took the teams over Gold Hill, to Dredge 6 and Icy View before it swung towards the Beam Road, then cut south, turned north near the Beam Road and took the south-bound trail back to the start line.

Nils Hahn won the race in a time of 46 min. 30 sec., followed by Tom Jamgochian driving Kirsten Bey dogs with a time of 53 min. 50 sec., Kamey Kapp came in third in 55 min., Diana Haecker fourth in 59 min., Kirsten Bey finished in fifth place in 60 min. and Rolland Trowbridge took his Greenland huskies over the trail in one hour and 37 min. Janet Balice participated as well but didn't complete the entire race trail.

The race had no purse money involved and was labeled a fun run, rewarded with cookies for the mushers at the end.

Basketball - Lady Nanooks fight hard in Cordova

By Stephen Palmatier

This past weekend, the Nome Lady Nanooks had another respectable showing at the Cordova Tournament, finishing in second place. In what looked to be a difficult tournament, the ladies finished it strong, winning two out of their three games played.

In the first game, the ladies lost 57-34 to Palmer, the eventual champions of the tournament, in what may have been their worst game played so far this season. In the second quarter, the ladies got outscored 24-2. This created a big halftime lead for Palmer, in which the ladies had very little chance of overcoming the deficit in the second half. Dylan Johnson led the scoring for the ladies with 11 points, Devynn Johnson and Chloe Mattheis each added 8 points. However, Devynn Johnson got into first half foul trouble, which made her unable to play as well as normal.

After the first game, it seemed like the ladies had a lot of things to correct, but in the second game, they did just that, as they were able to secure the victory in their second game against Yakutat, 54-39. The Nanooks' defense was much stronger and they also had stronger offensive production. Dylan Johnson again led the scoring for the Nanooks, but this time with 18 points. Shayla Johnson added 15 points and Kaitlyn Gartung had 9 points off the bench.

In the third and final game, the Nanooks had to face the home team Cordova. In what was a very hard fought contest, the Nanooks were able to come away with their second straight victory, winning a thriller 44-41. The Nanooks, who held a 7 point halftime lead, let it slip away as they scored only 4 points in the third quarter. With a tie heading into the 4th quarter, the Nanooks were able to bounce back strong in the quarter and pull out a three point victory. Shayla Johnson had another strong game, leading the Nanooks with 14 points and Devynn Johnson added 13.

The Lady Nanooks showed a lot of fight to come away with two victories after their tough defeat, but the games continue to show what has been an alarming trend all season for the Lady Nanooks—their inconsistency. With the 2 and 4 point quarters displayed during the tournament in separate games, it says that at times the ladies do not bring it all 32 minutes of the game. Thus, it has led to either too big of deficits to overcome or letting teams back into ballgames.

Nevertheless, the Lady Nanooks now stand at 9-4 on the season with the two victories in Cordova and now will be tested again when they head to the Bethel Tournament beginning this Thursday where they will face teams from Bethel, Galena, and Unalaska.

Nanooks take Cordova tournament title

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Nanooks boys basketball team continued what has been a dominant season by taking the Cordova Tip-off Tournament title. The Nanooks captured the title this past weekend by securing victories in all three games played against the Ketchikan JV, Yakutat and Cordova.

In the first game of the weekend slate, the Nome Nanooks captured the victory over the Ketchikan junior varsity, 59-40. Travel troubles caused the Ketchikan varsity team to not make the game in time. The Nanooks were led in scoring by Tyler Eide with 15 points. Eide also added seven assists and three steals for the game. Nathan Blandford added 11 points and four rebounds, and Jens Ireland recorded a double-double with 13 points and 10 rebounds. The big contribution of the game came from Cass Mattheis who had 11 points and eight rebounds off the bench. The game was even up until halftime with the Nanooks holding a five-point lead. But in the third quarter, the Nanooks took over, winning the third quarter 21-11 to extend the lead to 16 points. From there, the Nanooks held the lead to what was a 19-point victory.

In the next game against Yakutat, the Nanooks came out with a vengeance, never giving Yakutat a chance. By halftime, the Nanooks were up by 28 points and the game did not get any closer from then on, with the Nanooks winning 74-32, a commanding 42 points. The dual threat of Eide and Blandford once again took shape as they combined for 41 points in the game. But scoring was not the only aspect to their game as Eide added nine rebounds, eight assists and four steals as he nearly hit a triple-double. Blandford also had seven rebounds, four assists and three steals to add to his 20 points. Irelan had another solid showing adding nine points and nine rebounds. The Nanooks not only dominated the score of the game, but also the glass as they out rebounded Yakutat 47-20 in the contest.

In the third and final contest of the weekend for the Nanooks, it was their toughest test as not only Cordova was the home team of the tournament but they also had won both of their games of the weekend like Nome entering the contest. The Nanooks were able to come away with the 44-38 victory in what was a defensive struggle for both teams. Cordova led by two points at the end of the first quarter, but Nome came back in the second quarter for a fivepoint halftime lead. The second half then stayed with that deficit for Cordova for much of the rest of the game. The Nanooks once again were led by Eide in scoring with 15 points and he added five more steals. Blandford scored 13 and added six rebounds and Irelan had seven points and led the team with eight rebounds. The story of this game was the amount of turnovers committed by Cordova, as Cordova turned the ball over 22 times, compared to only 11 for the Nanooks.

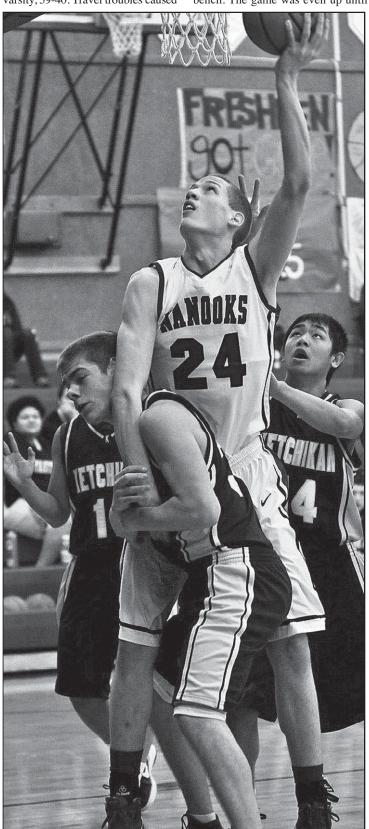

With the weekend action, the Nanooks move to an impressive 12-

1 on the season and continue to show that they not only can score the ball, but also play suffocating defense. Blandford, Eide and Irelan, who all made the all-tournament team for the weekend, continue to lead the Nanooks to a great season. Blandford was also named the tournament's most valuable player. The Nome Nanooks look to continue their great season when they head to the Bethel Tournament starting this Thursday where they will play teams from Bethel, Galena and Unalaska.

Patience and communication were key to get USCG icebreaker Healy and M/V Renda safely to Nome

LOCAL

By Diana Haecker

While Nome was giddy with excitement on account of the arrival of the historic winter fuel delivery, the crews on the US Coast Guard cutter Healy and the Russian tanker M/V Renda had the chance to take a deep breath and digest the dramatic voyage to Nome, breaking literally into uncharted territory.

The voyage started on January 3, when the Renda and the Healy joined up in Dutch Harbor. The ships could be seen on the horizon off Nome on Friday, Jan. 13 and were parked in place for the fuel transfer on Sunday. "When I saw the lights of Nome, I was thinking that it would be nice to get close enough to shore so that crew members can catch cell service so that they can call their families," described Healy Captain Beverly Havlik her first thoughts when Nome was spotted. Instead of celebrating, Havlik knew that this was only the first part of the journey – the ships yet had to successfully park in Nome, deliver the oil and then complete the return trip to Dutch Harbor. Never before had a U.S. icebreaker escorted a commercial tanker from Russia, with a Russian crew, through thick ice in the middle of winter to deliver a load of fuel to Nome. As the oil was pumping from the tanker Renda to Bonanza Fuel tanks in Nome, residents were welcome to visit the USCG Healy and everybody received a tour of the ship.

Captain Havlik invited The Nugget for a tour of the 420-foot long floating village, complete with elaborate science labs, temperature controlled rooms, a huge galley where every meal is made from scratch, a hangar to park the Dolphin helicopter and that on occasion functions as the movie theatre with a big screen. The sun flooded the bridge as Havlik entered and explained the various navigational instruments and communication lines. Through the large panoramic windows, the city of Nome spread out with a well-beaten highway over the ice leading to Middle Beach.

On board was the American Alaska Marine Pilot Peter Garay, who was on board of the Renda during the trip to Nome. Garay and Havlik described the voyage as an elaborate dance between two partners that had yet to grow accustomed to their different rhythms and dance

Garay said he was the other set of eyes and ears on the Renda to help Captain Havlik and to verify to make sure that all is safe. "I was there to make sure that the mission isn't pushing any parameters that we shouldn't have. Safety and efficiency were the key words," Garay said. Havlik added that Marine Pilot on the Renda was the common "lingo link" to the other vessel. "As an English speaker and maritime speaker, he talked the same language in terms of speed and ship handling characteristics of Renda," Havlik explained.

Both Garay and Havlik said that the most valuable commodity on that first part of their journey was patience. "We were like an odd couple, the Renda and the Healy, wouldn't you say?" said Garay to Havlik. "As we moved along we got a little closer and closer and we found ourselves actually being able to work together. People say that practice makes perfect, but for us practice made for good progress," Garay said.

Challenges were abound. Garay said that while the ice presented its own challenges, the main hurdle at first were communication issues. "There were some rough spots," Garay said. "One of the more challenging components wasn't ice but the human element of overcoming ability to communicate the most simple things," Garay said. The Renda's 30-year-old Captain Sergey Kopytov is experienced in icebreaker-escorted tanker transits in Russia. The Healy has never done it. The Russians do

How to treat common knee pain

FAMILY

By Bob Lawrence, MD Ålaska Family Doctor

The human knee is an elegant hinge joint artistically engineered to provide stability and strength for a lifetime of movement.

But freedom of movement comes at a price. The knee is prone to injury and pain from overuse because it must bear the full weight of the body during many activities. Think about climbing stairs. With each step, there is a point at which your full body weight is being lifted to the next step by bending and then extending one knee.

There are many common causes of knee pain including: arthritis, erosion of the smooth joint surface; bursitis, inflammation of small sacs of slippery fluid around the knee that normally help the joint to glide smoothly; ligament injury, like an anterior cruciate ligament (ACL) tear; meniscus injury to the shock absorbers of the knee; or a tendonitis of a muscle that crosses the knee

Injuries to the knee often cause swelling and, depending on severity, may lead to a few moments of discomfort or even a visit to the emergency room.

Regardless of severity, a few basic actions taken early can greatly reduce the healing time and prevent further damage to the knee.

At the time of injury it is important to initiate the steps of the P-R-I-C-E-D pneumonic: Protect the joint from further injury with a brace, splint, or elastic bandage; Rest the knee; Ice the affected area for 15 minutes every several hours; Compress the area with an elastic bandage or neoprene brace to prevent the

The steps of rehabilitation are simple but very important: restore range-of-motion; stretch and strengthen the joint; and re-establish proprioceptive control.

The first step involves restoring range-ofmotion. This prevents prolonged stiffness in the joint.

Just like a machine that gets rusty when left sitting, lack of use causes the knee to degrade. Therefore, to prevent stiffness, the knee should be bent and then extended as far as comfortably tolerated preferably while lying down, or while seated, in order to limit any resistance of the motion. This exercise should be done multiple times throughout the day during rehabilitation.

The second step involves stretching and strengthening the knee. This is best accomplished by bending and extending the knee against resistance using a weight machine, or gently squatting about 45 degrees and then standing while using free weights or objects in the home, like milk jugs, to provide the resistance. This exercise strengthens the muscles that move the knee and the tendons that cross the joint. Again the knee is only moved through a comfortable range of motion, stopping if pain occurs. Resistance training strengthens the knee and, in a sense, encourages the formation of an internal knee brace since the ligaments of the knee heal along lines of force.

The final, and arguably the most important step in rehabilitation, involves teaching the brain to trust the knee again. This is called proprioceptive training. Sports medicine doctors and physical therapists often recommend the use of a balance board or rocker board during this stage. In the absence of a balance board, a simple home technique is to stand on one leg at a time while doing something else like lifting light weights, brushing teeth, working on a computer, or watching TV. Standing on each leg separately teaches the brain to have confidence in the strength of both knees again. The stork-like maneuver or use of a balance board forces the brain to trust the knee in various positions allowing for the restoration of normal movement when walking, running, or playing sports.

Weight loss and regular exercise are important parts of reducing knee pain and protecting the knees from further injury. In fact, from the knees' point of view, a little weight loss goes a long way. Every pound of weight lost equals six pounds of weight taken off the knees when performing weight-bearing tasks.

Any worsening of knee pain or redness, swelling, or fever associated with a knee injury needs to be evaluated medically. See your doctor if your knee pain is not responding to conservative therapy.

Treating knee pain can take weeks to months depending on the severity of the injury, but the time invested is well worth the effort because proper rehabilitation will shorten the healing time and reduce the risk of future injury.

Thank you!

The Jennetten Family thanks the community of Nome for all of the generosity, love and support shown to us in our time of need. In November 2011 Joe Jennetten was diagnosed with a very rare and extremely invasive type of vasculitis. Immedietely, individuals started to organize many types of support including a fundraiser by the ANB Club. Also, there were countless individuals who provided our family with dinner, gifts, and unforgotten acts of kindness. The thoughts and prayers that were dedicated to us have been a saving grace for our family.

Again, the occupants of Nome have proven once again that when another family is in a time of need they are ready and willing to assist in any means possible. Currently, Joe is in his home town of Peoria, IL receiving wound care treatment, specialized infusions and being closely observed by a Rheumatologist. He is healing well and hopes to be returning home in the near future. Thank you to everyone who has shown support to us in some way, we are extremely grateful to have so many wonderful people in our lives.

~The Jennetten Family

The family of Napoleon J. Bergamaschi thanks the Nome Volunteer Ambulance and Rescue Team, City of Nome Police Department, Norton Sound Health Corporation, Norton Sound Fisheries, United Methodist Church, Arctic Trading Post, Nome Eskimo Community, Cootis Warneke, Carl Peterson and family, JoAnn Ozenna and family, Robert "Sonson" Dickson, Fred Tocktoo and family, Helen Dickson, all the Bergamaschi families, the many friends and acquaintances, so many of you, for all the calls, notes and support! We wouldn't have made it without you; once again

PUBLIC MEETINGS

Effects of Oil and Gas Activities in the Arctic Ocean Draft Environmental Impact Statement

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's (NOAA) National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) invites everyone to attend upcoming public meetings. NMFS has prepared a Draft Environmental Impact Statement (DEIS) to analyze the impacts of issuing marine mammal Incidental Take Authorizations to the oil and gas industry during offshore exploration activities (e.g., seismic surveys and exploratory drilling) in federal and state waters of the U.S. Chukchi and Beaufort seas. Comments must be received by February 28, 2012.

The format for the public meetings will consist of an open house, followed by an opportunity for comments. During the open house, representatives from NMFS, the cooperating agencies, and third-party EIS team will be available to discuss the project and answer questions. The public meetings will be documented by a court reporter.

Please contact Michael Payne, NMFS Office of Protected Resources, (301) 713-0376 or visit the project website for more information: http://www.nmfs.noaa.gov/pr/permits/eis/arctic.htm.

Requests for sign language interpretation or auxiliary aids should be made at least 10 days before the scheduled meeting to Erin Green Dunable at (907) 562-3366 or Erin.Green@urs.com.

GETTING READY TO ROLL - With the fuel transfer successfully completed, the USCG cutter Healy, left, began the process of breaking the ice to free M/V Renda from her parking spot in front of Nome. The ships started their journey south on Saturday.

those sorts of transits all the time and at one point, a video supplied by Peter Garay even showed Kopytov getting out the Russian book on the "Art of icebreaking in the Arctic" pointing to a paragraph that says how many cables distance and at what speed to travel when in convoy behind an icebreaker. The book showed also photos of icebreakers followed by convoys of multiple tankers traveling behind. Now, the Healy has their own procedures and standards. which the Russians had to accept to abide by. After a few days of repeatedly getting stuck and having disagreements on speed and distances between the ships, halfway into the voyage, Garay said the vessel crews learned to find the traveling speed and distance that worked and both ships were "poetry in motion," as Garay described it.

There were times when they had to make very close passes. "Hand me that coffee, Pete," Capt. Havlik halfjoked, describing how close the ships were at times.

The reaction on the Renda when they saw the lights of Nome was guarded as well. "Just because you see the steeple of the church doesn't mean you're home," said Garay. When he saw the steeple [of Old St. Joe's Hall] he had a reaction of guarded optimism, but not until they parked the Renda on the orange-dyed spot that the Healy had marked for them on the ice, did he feel relief, Garay said. "Two times in my life did I feel such professional satisfaction and a sense of accomplishment," said Garay. "One was when I graduated from the Maritime Academy and the other was when we parked Renda in front of Nome."

Despite the trials and errors - or because of working through themthe vessels made it to Nome, with Healy breaking the trail and Renda following suit. When the ships weighed their anchors on Friday, the Healy had to make a few passes to break Renda out of the frozen parking spot and off they sailed Saturday morning into the sunrise.

As of press time, they are still underway making progress toward the ice edge when their ways will part. The Healy is bound to Dutch Harbor and ultimately back to her homeport in Seattle.

Healy and Renda reach open water, go separate ways

By Sandra L. Medearis

The U.S. Coast Guard Cutter Healy and the Russian-flagged fuel tanker Renda cleared the ice pack south of Nome on Sunday afternoon Jan. 29, according to USCG public affairs department.

The ships left Nome Jan. 21 after the tanker crew and a local transfer team successfully unloaded 1.4 million gallons of gasoline and diesel fuel to top off a winter fuel supply. In order to leave Nome, the Healy had to break itself out of the shorefast ice and then free the Renda, intentionally allowed to freeze into the ice for stability while fuel flowed through hoses across the ice into the storage tanks.

As soon as the ships cleared the ice, they would go their separate ways. The Healy would put into Dutch Harbor and then take up its journey south to Seattle, expected to reach its destination Feb. 2-6, according to USCG Petty Officer Charly Hengen.

Monday noon the Renda was 50 miles west of Dutch Harbor, steaming toward Vladivostok, according to Mark Smith of Vitus Marine.

Piling in streets is snow solution

By Sandra L. Medearis

It's over. No more clearing large parking lots and piling the snow in the public right of way, say Nome's Public Works Department and Nome Common Council members.

A measure will come up for a vote soon with requirements for commercial snow disposal. That's the way the conversation went at a Council work session Jan. 29.

Keeping fire lanes clear during triple storms recently was well nigh impossible, according to Nathan "Red" Barron, one of the City guys who pushes snow after storms pile it on.

"Normally we can clean up snow in two to three days—but with multiple storms we couldn't; it was overwhelming," Barron said. Snow blowers cannot handle sky-high piles of cleared snow.

Several at the meeting observed that workers were being paid to choke the streets with snow and then being paid again to haul it away.

It's over. No more storing vehicles in the right-of-way for the winter. Vehicles parked in the right-of-way and people pushing driveway snow into fire lanes added to the problem, Barron said.

"We could say no pushing snow during storms or until we get a double lane cleared," he suggested.

Other suggestions involved towing vehicles and storing for a short time before they went to auction or other disposal, fines for vehicles in the right-of-way, as in Anchorage, and a requirement that commercial snow removers carry away snow and deposit in City approved dumps.

A measure concerning snow removal would appear on the agenda soon, according to Council members.

In a special meeting of the Council following the work session, the Nome Gold Alaska seeks permit to fill wetlands around Nome from NovaGold Resources Inc., is starting to ramp up gold mining next summer. According to the company's plans, drilling results showed that an economic quantity of placer gold is still in the ground and the company proposes to expand the scope of the mining operation to commercial-scale mining in 2012 to 2015.

Nome Gold Alaska submitted a permit application to the Army Corps of Engineers, requesting to discharge dredged material and fill material into 20 acres of wetlands. The application is out for a public comment period, which started on January 23 and will end on February 22, 2012.

nd will end on February 22, 2012.

According to the Nome Gold plan, the company wants to work on nearly 60 acres on their Monroeville Placer gold mine project. The area impacted is north of the city proper and northwest of Icy View, on the west side of the Nome-Beltz Highway. The plan describes that mining will begin by excavating and processing thawed pay gravel along the east wall of the unreclaimed Windfall Pit and then move east and south into partly frozen ground.

An area of 4.6 acres that have been previously disturbed will be impacted as well as 36.4 acres of undisturbed tundra, 11.4 acres of ponds – old pits that were never reclaimed – and 7.4 acres of an overburden stockpile on a previously mined area.

The plan for 2012 is to dig a 700 ft. wide by 750 ft. long mine pit, of the thawed Windfall Bench. The mine pit will be excavated to bedrock using dozers and a dragline to produce pay gravel that would be processed in a wash plant on site. From 2013 to 2015 the miners propose to expand the mine pits to the east and south and expect an annual production of 750,000 cubic yards. In all, nearly 60 acres will be disturbed.

The company's reclamation plan is summed up in one paragraph, saying "the mined lands are private property and after mining, would be used to generate further revenue for the owner." Gravel tailings are used to backfill the mine pits. "If dust generated by wind over tailing stockpiles is a problem, the reserved organic overburden will be spread over the tailings [...]," the plan says. The landowners also leave open the possibility to further develop the land. "It is possible that the mined lands will be landscaped and sub-divided for domestic use," the planning documents say.

The company plans to restore the unreclaimed Windfall Pit and the Bessie Pit as ponds. New mine pits would be partly backfilled with plant tailings. Coarse tailings are going to be stacked for gravel sales. Flooded

Letters -

Greetings from the Appalachian Mountains of Tennessee.

Now that Nome has been in the news so much of the unprecedented winter fuel transfer, I'd like to ask a few questions.

- 1. I suppose a Russian tanker was the closest way to obtain fuel. How much did the fuel and delivery cost for 1.3 million gallons?
- 2. Was this only gasoline and diesel, or some fuel oil as well?
- 3. Who paid for the fuel and delivery? Alaska State? or did the citizens of Nome have to pay for it? If the locals had to pay, how is the cost distributed among everyone?

Glad the transfer worked out for you safely. It's always good to know that the Coast Guard has the skills for such an extreme job. Jerald Byrd

Dear Editor,

I was disappointed last week to read that the City Council is looking into ways to change the city sales tax for pull-tabs in Nome. A sales tax by definition is on the retail sales of the merchandise, whether it be fuel, food or just different ways to buy cash.

Illegitimus non carborundum

We can't be at the mercy of oil dealers and the sea ice. We must hoopla about the fuel shortage. We have gone into sticker shock with the price of fuel and what have we done? Nothing.

What if other businesses in Nome petitioned to pay, sales tax on just what they thought their profit was, and not on what they were charging for their goods and services? And then say they weren't changing the price they charged customers on top of that? Why should this one business get these breaks?

It shouldn't make much difference that pull-tabs only deal with cash taken in and given out. It is still sales. Pull tabs don't seem to be doing badly or need subsidized to bring up their sales in Nome. I've never seen a discount sale on pulltabs, like other retail vendors have to

I saw the argument that the pulltabs are for the benefit of non-profits, and that these non-profits will suffer if the tax isn't changed, but it also says that the pull-tab distributors already pass their tax expenses on to their non-profit partners who are the reason they can run their pull-tabs in the first place. I'm sure other retail businesses in Nome would do their best to absorb or split their increased expenses, and not just pass them on to their customers, or beneficiaries. Maybe we'll see how much when our new oil prices hit. Are the pulltab distributors going to pass other expenses along when they offer to pay a tax only on their profit? Will they add in utilities and fuel costs as well? This may become a bookkeeping problem at collection time. And the beneficiaries of the pull-tab money are non-profits. The city probably won't get any tax money out of any purchases made with this money after they get it.

In the past, the non-profits the pull-tabs have been playing for have not all been from, or even for, Nome. Many of the games have been for groups based in Anchorage, or even farther away. Pull-tab openings for non-profits from the distributors in Nome are very limited. Many seem to have been grandfathered in, or at least are not open for completion by other groups. There doesn't seem to be much shakeup of the pull-tab sponsors involved, even though we have been adding non-profit organizations with good goals and ideas that are needed in Nome all the time. I bet a good many of the pull-tabs sponsors we have now have been sponsors in the same establishments since pull-tabs started in Nome. These aren't the only deserving groups in Nome or the only groups doing good in the city, or the only groups coming to the city for special favors and extra support.

Keeping a standard sales tax on all retail sales that go on in Nome would not only be a more consistent program, but easier to regulate. Above that, I'm more convinced the City Council would be able to more equitably distribute at least this little taxed portion of the benefits of Nome's gambling endeavor to more of the worthy events and groups that deserve support for OUR REGON than just those who have managed pull-tab support. Would the City then stop entirely from granting waivers for their building charges for various events at the Mini, Old St. Joe's, or the Rec. Center? Would they turn the Girl Scouts or childcare agencies out cold from now on? How long would they be able to do that without repercussions? We don't need to create special laws that help concentrate wealth, even to the few lucky non-profits with pull-tabs. Sincerely, Lew Tobin

Nome, AK

Dear Editor,

SEND THE RENDA BACK! Apparently there's another vital shortage in Nome! Last week, I received a perplexing message from my son stating he needed twenty-five cents to buy a plastic fork for school lunch. Despite having more than sufficient funds in his school lunch account, he didn't have any additional cash or coinage on him at that exact time.

I will readily admit that we are a family that eats soup with a fork, but I guess as Alaskans we're used to a hearty meal! Apparently Tuesday was "Spoon Day" at Nome Beltz High School (did we miss that legislation?) because chili was being served, therefore no forks were provided. However, a lot of students bring their own lunch where spoons iust don't cut it. The school would not issue anyone the preferred plastic fork unless they paid the school twenty five cents. Nope, not a dollar, because they couldn't make change, it had to be a quarter. Seriously? He asked me what he was supposed to do "eat with his hands?" I felt like saying that as long as they didn't charge for extra napkins to go for it! Yes, he could have made the cultural leap and ate with a spoon, but the fact that the school is now "charging" for a plastic fork is beyond ridiculous!

I admit I was skeptical so, wanting to get to the bottom of this, I called the school to see if it was now mandatory that students are required to BUY their eating utensils. I was informed that it "had become such a problem" with kids asking for forks that the school has decided to charge twenty five cents for these plastic utensils.

Parents of students at Nome Beltz High School should be forewarned! Your child must come equipped with loose change or they will not be allowed a fork. Or at least until our son's supply is depleted, because we promptly ran down over to our local grocer to buys plastic forks so our son might do the charitable thing and provide utensils free of charge for those without loose quarters jangling. The first store was sold out go figure! We then went on to the next store, where we bought multiple boxes of plastic forks at seven cents per fork. Considering the elevated prices in Nome, this begs the question of where the proceeds from the plastic utensil fund are going? More vegetables? Fresh fruit? Larger portions? I guess either way the kids who bring their own lunches are out of the loop...again. While I hate to belabor the point, is there even a line item budget for utensils?

Hey, call it our contribution to alleviating Nome Public Schools budgetary problems during these obviously troubling times. In a land where tomato katsup is still considered a vegetable, apparently every little bit helps.

So with that said, here's our top ten list for how we might better serve the school's budget crisis as well as some general chuckles about this inane situation:

- · Get rid of your steel utensils and invest in Sporks like every other school in the nation
- Give the proceeds to the Nanook Booster Club so at least we know the money is going to a good cause
- · Charge out of town teams TRIPLE!
- Use the proceeds to hire a special "Utensil Distribution Coordinator" (and staff)
- Add a utensil button on the cafeteria register so the students might at least charge to their existing student lunch account (dare we add plates and napkins?)
- Provide suitable notice of the requirement in the student handbook for parents to provide either quarters or forks as part of their "required student supply" list
- Charge for tissue paper and napkins too (Waste Disposal Coordina-
- No child left behind -except at lunch!
- Paraphrase from "A Few Good Men": "You want the fork? You can't pay for fork!"
- Paraphrase from C. Walken on Saturday Night Live skit: "Guess what?! I got a fever, and the only prescription is more forks!"

Despite the humor expressed in this letter there is a lesson to be learned. Please encourage your child to speak up for what's right for themselves and others!

DNR proposes changes to mission statement

Dept. of Natural Resources Commissioner Dan Sullivan has changed the department's mission statement to "Responsibly develop Alaska's resources by making them available for maximum use and benefit consistent with the public interest." Previously, the mission statement read that the DNR is to "develop, conserve and maximize the use of Alaska's natural resources consistent with the public interest." According to DNR spokesperson Elizabeth Bluemink, the change also includes revision to the department's "core services." It now rests with the Alaska Legislature to review the change as part of the budget process. Bluemink said that according to the Department of Law, the commissioner has the authority to issue or change a department mission statement as long as it doesn't conflict with a legislative one. Bluemink said that Commissioner Sullivan emphasizes that DNR continues to view conservation and protecting present and future Alaskans as key components of DNR's mission. "Conservation and protecting generations are encompassed in the revised mission statement's emphasis on responsible development and working the public interest," Bluemink wrote in an email correspondence with the Nome Nugget.

Alaska Legislature is in full swing

The Senate Health and Social Services committee last week considered a bill to temporarily restore funding to the Alaska Immunization Program. Sen. Cathy Giessel, R-Anchorage, introduced SB 144 with Sen. Donald Olson, D-Nome, to address a reduction in federal funding for Alaska vaccines. The program was cut from $4.3 million in FY 2010 down to a mere $700,000 for FY 2013. As a consequence the number of eligible vaccines available to children throughout the state was dramatically reduced and completely discontinue those available to adults. SB 144 temporarily substitutes state funding for the decrease in federal funding through FY2015. This action, the Senators hope, would give the State time to find a long-term funding solution.

The House approved making July 30 "National Guard Day", and passed a bill to establish a community and transportation advisory board.

Renda and Healy reach icefree waters

The Coast Guard Cutter Healy and tanker vessel Renda crews reached the ice-free portion of the Bering Sea late Sunday afternoon. The Coast Guard reported on Monday that the two vessels were parting ways as the Healy returns to homeport in Seattle and Renda sails on to her Russian home. Despite the fact that the commercial fuel delivery was not for the City of Nome, officials still speak of the City as being the recipient of the diesel and gasoline. "Throughout this historic journey the Coast Guard has benefited from federal, state and local partnerships to deliver the critical fuel supply to the City of Nome," said Rear Adm. Thomas Ostebo, 17th Coast Guard District commander.

Permits for Arctic drilling do not include Nome in meeting schedules

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration as well as Environmental Protection Agency are slated to hold meetings, seeking input on wastewater discharge permits and Environmental Impact Statements regarding oil and gas activity in the northern waters, but there won't be a meeting coming near you. While Nome is likely to be impacted by the onslaught of marine traffic associated with Shell's permitted oil and gas exploration slated for this summer, the federal agencies are holding meetings in Barrow and other North Slope communities as well as Anchorage, but not Nome. The EPA seeks input on two draft wastewater discharge permits for oil and gas exploration activities in the Beaufort Sea and Chukchi Sea. The proposed Clean Water Act permits protect public health and the marine environment by placing limits and conditions on the types and amounts of pollution companies can discharge in wastewater during oil and gas exploration activities. In March, two meetings are scheduled to take place in Barrow and Anchorage.

NOAA is putting on several meetings in North Slope borough communities about the effects of oil and gas activities EIS focusing on marine mammal incidental take authorizations.

Planning puts fine-toothed comb to museum sites

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Planning Commission met in a two-hour work session Jan. 26 to put in their two cents on how 10 proposed sites meet Nome's technical zoning and land use laws for building the $16-million Richard Foster Building.

In November, Mayor Denise Michels asked the commission to conduct a technical review of land parcels prior to the selection for the Richard Foster Building. The final selection of a site lay with the Nome Common Council, NPC chair Tom Sparks made perfectly clear.

"The Council is going to make the decision, not the planning commission," he said. "We think the museum and library decision should recommend a site to the Council for decision. We are looking to complement you as a body to give good information for a good decision."

The panel and members of the Nome Museum and Library Commission began with a set of facts and used the first 40 minutes of the session settling on criteria for the matrix discussing the sites. The NMLC in a prior meeting this month decided that the Kegoyah Kozgah Library should be housed in the facility. Fair market value would rule the appraisals of any chosen sites. The planners had a set of maps and a fact sheet for each piece of land proposed for sale that included footage, assessed value, any improvements, lot and block location. The museum commission had put land proposals referred to as Green Family, King Island and Rasmussen/Munn/West on their short list for scrutiny

The City's Request For Proposals specified a minimum of 17,000 square feet with a preference for downtown, but would not eliminate a site if it were not downtown.

The museum and library group favored downtown, John Handeland, a member, said.

"In past discussion the members felt strongly that a site on Front Street should have extra points," he said. You go to Kotzebue and there is no downtown. We have spaces on Front Street that can be filled or upgraded.'

Then the planners, including the museum and library commission, went over each piece by order on the list of following properties:

Kawerak, Inc.—28,000 sq. feet; Seppala Drive and C Street.

Green Family—21,682 sq. ft.; East Front Street and Mettler Way, across from the State Building.

King Island—17,450 sq. ft.; south side of River Street, west of Nugget

James D. West trust—21,824 sq. ft.; site of Gladys and Jim West Sr. home extending west, bordered by River Street and West First.

Rasmussen/Munn/West - 26,855 sq. ft.; corner of Front Street and Federal Way; a proposal put together by Erna and Leo Rasmussen, Thu Lan Munn and Jim West Jr. that includes land under Munn's unfinished building and Rasmussen Music

Alaska Gold Co. - 172,000 sq. ft.; Sixth Avenue with access from Steadman, the site originally proposed by the State of Alaska for a new state building.

City of Nome-Ice Rink site; 29,753 sq. ft.; East Third Avenue. City of Nome - Anvil City Square (portion); 19,800 sq. ft.; museum would share site with Old St. Joe's meeting hall and the Three Lucky Swedes, placed at the northeast corner on Division and Warren Place.

City of Nome—Steadman Field, 45,916 sq. ft.; Fourth Avenue.

The group considered each piece against a grid with the following columns: 100-yr. flood zone; zoning compliance or variance needed; parking within the parcel for maximum of 10 cars; traffic flow-number of street frontages and allowance for bus traffic; central location-premium for Front Street: museum commission short list; site will meet needs of preliminary design-outdoor venue possible; other-water, sewer, gravel, snow, power, tax, value, aesthetics, especially view.

"Once the Council has input from planning, they will do a short list," Josie Bahnke, city manager said. The contract architect, Terry Hyer of Anchorage will also look at the proposed sites.

The group consensus favored one story or possibly two, with activities that needed to be monitored confined to the first floor, with open space and visibility between the museum and library areas to reduce the number of employees needed.

"People don't like steps," Handeland said. "There are elders who still want to participate and be a part of things.'

The architect has estimated 17,000 feet needed for the museum facility. With the decision to include the library, the plan would come up with additional footage, but not a lot, with the future of books going to electronic books, Bahnke said.

The availability of adjacent parcels would be considered in selection, the group felt.

The group did not award points during the consideration and exploration of the parcels.

"I don't want to get bogged up in scores. I want us to be objective rather than subjective," he said.

The matrix of parcel considerations are available to the public and would soon be online, Vanessa Musich, city clerk, said.

mine pits will be reclaimed as ponds and organic stockpiles would be used to grade over disturbed surfaces and banks, the plan says. Reclamation is expected to be done in 2016.

The Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation also needs to give its blessings to the project by issuing a state water quality certification. The DEC also takes public comment until Feb. 22.

The Army Corps will make the decision whether to grant or deny the permit based on an evaluation of the impacts, the cumulative effect the project has on the public interest. The Army Corps weighs factors such as conservation, economics, aesthetics, general environmental concerns, wetlands, cultural values, land use, recreation, in general, the needs and welfare of the people.

Hours of operation, noise and dust mitigation are not addressed in the

An established dog mushing and recreational trail went through the area, now destroyed by mining activities on the privately held land.

The Army Corps has not set a public hearing for the application. However, the public can request such a hearing in writing during the public comment period, which closes on February 22.

floaded to a Dutch Harbor based tug the Vitus Marine interpreter and the USCG Chief, who were onboard for the ice transit," Smith said.

The National Weather Service provided forecasts and guidance to the Healy through satellite data as it escorted the tanker about 400 miles through the ice pack on its way back to home port at Vladivostok. The ice was 10 to 18 inches thick playing out to new ice just a few inches thick with open space between, according to the NWS last spot forecast for the project on Jan. 29, with temperatures running 0 to 10 degrees until the ships left the ice.

The Coast Guard personnel, who stayed on the Healy for the fuel project over the holidays, would be happy to change out for some shore leave, Hengen said.

"You have people who have been on there for eight to nine months," she said.

Sitnasuak Native Corp. contracted Vitus Marine of Anchorage to deliver the fuel after a Delta Western barge failed to arrive before the ice blocked the way into Nome. Vitus Marine used the ice-class, double-hulled Russian-flagged tanker to collect fuel at South Korea and Dutch Harbor. Then the Renda followed the USCG ice breaker through the ice pack to Nome.

Jason Evans, chair of Sitnasuak's board of directors, said last week that he and the fuel committee would be able to determine a retail price for the fuel when the Renda came to the end of its charter in Vladivostok.

Sitnasuak used the tanker arrangement to avoid flying in fuel 4,500 to 5,000 gallons at a time at a quoted cost from $3.50 to $4.50 per gallon, isfy the demand, he said.

panel discussed and passed on a list of federal and state legislative priorities for the City's lobbyists to push.

At Councilwoman Mary Knodel's urging-not taking no for an answer- the Council moved affordable energy up the state list from near the bottom of the infrastructure list to fourth on the list. The first three priorities in order are water and sewer infrastructure improvements, Port of Nome improvements worth $161.5 million to expand and repair marine infrastructure to meet growing needs of industry working in the port, and support for long-term care facility and assisted living facility.

Knodel made it clear that she wanted follow-through on a discussion and decision at a prior Council meeting that the City spend for an energy expert who had no stake in the outcome to ascertain whether energy sources existed in the Nome area for sooner rather than later development to lower energy costs. Buy some advice now, Knodel said, and ask the state for money for reimbursement. People are leaving town. Do we have geothermal? Coal? Any-

The federal priorities list deals with port expansion and causeway extension to give Nome a deep draft arctic port and a U.S. Coast Guard seasonal forward operating location in Nome; portable firefighting equipment to use aboard ships and in surrounding villages; Alaska Army National Guard readiness center and field maintenance shop facility; and community power generation issues.

The Council unanimously passed a resolution naming Nome Police Department's Chief John Papasodora as acting city manager during City Manager Josie Bahnke's absence for personal leave February 2 through 17.

Fuel tanker Renda owner samples Nome, finds it good

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Russian-registered tanker Renda's owner visited Nome while the ship was in port. This year the company that Fazil Z. Aliyev founded will celebrate its 20th anniversary. Russian Inspectors and Marine Surveyors Corp has about 2,000 employees. The 371-foot ice comes down to the point sometimes when a captain has to make an immediate decision. People in authority have no clue what pressure he is under. They can't tell him what he has to do; he is out there in his own. Sometimes he will make it through, sometimes he will not," Aliyev explains. "If he is in trouble, he is in trouble; he is not the kind to say there was no mistake, but it is his responsibility. Here, on this end, you have to follow rules and wait for commands, you can't take all the responsibility to make the decision on your own.

"Captains were trained that way. When it comes to making crucial decountries, but it brought us together to accomplish the same task. The U.S. did its part and Russia did its part, Aliyev said. "I will not ever say they are not so good at doing their business. I will never say that we are better. Everybody was doing his job. We all have the same God that we are cisions and you are out there on your own, the captain is like a god, and everyone obeys," Aliyev said. "But it is so much easier these days with technology, and satellites and all the equipment. They are better informed to make a judgment, with not so many unfortunate results."

Nevertheless, Aliyev has respect for the work and assistance of the U.S. Coast Guard and all those who helped with the delivery of the fuel.

"As I see this project, it brought us together. Yes, we are from different walking under."

When he goes back to Vladivostok, what will he say about Nome?

"I was touched to the depth of my heart with the warmth of the community and how they responded to me," Aliyev said. "Everywhere I went they have embraced me. They give me the impression they appreciate the hard work my people have

"I especially was touched that the little kids at the elementary school wrote us a big thank you and signed heir names

'Unfortunately, these days, in the big cities I go to, I never have received a response like this. No money would ever compare to the appreciation of the heart people gave me. That's what counts. Also I appreciate that the USCG, the Russians and the Nome people were working together like one organism, without division."

Throughout the interview Aliyev was pleasant but professional. He ate several pieces of pizza and pushed the remainder of the pie away.

Time for one more question: what does he do to relax in his leisure time?

Aliyev lighted up like Red Square on New Year's Eve.

on New Year's Eve. RIMSCO Racing—his own team. They participate in Russian championship racing. He builds his own cars. He has one named "Combat" that has 1200 horsepower. He is building a new car and upping the power to 1,500 horses.

"It is very fast. I like the moment it feels like the wind," Aliyev says. He releases the brake, steps on the gas and zooms one-quarter mile until the parachute stops him.

"It relieves the tension. It relaxes me."

WARM RECEPTION—Fazil Z Aliyev, owner of the fuel tanker Renda that brought 1.4 million gallons of fuel through the ice to Nome, said he found the community's warmth in subzero weather.

class double-hulled tanker Renda is one of three tankers RIMSCO owns among its more than 50 vessels—tugs, barges, dredging barges, salvage vessels and cranes. Its spheres of activity comprise ship survey services, cargo transport, ship chartering, shipping agency and appraisals. A subsidiary business provides offloading services and short-term storage during cargo documentation at the port in Vladivostok.

Aliyev did not arrive on the T/VRenda. He flew for two days to get here—from Vladivostok, to Beijing, to Tokyo, to Anchorage, to Nome. He had read and heard news articles that missed the mark, he said, and wanted to verify safe fuel transfer himself.

Chatting over lunch at Airport Pizza with Luda Kinok of Nome as translator, Aliyev said a boyhood love for ships did not get him into the business, but that he had always wanted to become a sea captain. He achieved that desire before starting the marine surveying and appraisal business.

When he visited his crew aboard the Renda, they did not complain, he said.

"We've done tasks like this before, but it was unusual and hard to do, but we have done it," Aliyev

"It was built to break through three-foot ice, sometimes thicker, depending on the lateral pressure from the ice, the current and weather," he said. "Ice breakers have been a business for decades in northern Russia; it is a very common part of our northern world."

His crew took the task in stride, but operating the tanker in foreign waters added a dimension to the stress.

"Our seamen are so used to traveling on the Russian oceans that they know everything. They know every corner as year after year they have been doing this. Now they come to a part of the ocean where they have never been before, and they respect the rules of this different country and understand they must submit to these regulations, they also are not familiar with the part of the ocean itself, so they are glad they had an escort to help them out, Aliyev explained.

Are the rules that different?

Aliyev laughs. "They are much more strict," he said. A ship captain in Russia has more independence he thinks

"When it comes to our country, it

School board approves 56'er administrative assistant contracts

By Lori Head

The 56'er area of Nome Elementary will see new administrative faces soon. The first 18 days will be covered by Mr. Dan Eide, the following 60 days by Mr. Joe Braach. Terms of the contract are $500 a day plus $75 per diem. The duties will include meeting with students, parents and staff, helping with student transitions from one place to another, coaching teachers on classroom management and other typical administrative duties according to Michael Brawner, superintendent.

Board member Barb Amarok expressed hope that the majority of time spent by both consultants would be "working with the teachers so that changes can be made in a way that the pod, the classrooms and the instruction are structured so that we would not get to this point again next She also expressed concerns that the assistant not have a lot of time scheduled as a "detention monitor" which Brawner assured was "not the intent," although he did acknowledge that the assistant would be working from that source or area

Brawner also discussed, at length, two main topics regarding "Goals and Assumptions" during the Nome Board of Education's work session on January 24, 2012. The first topic was what to do with the sixth graders (see related article).

The second topic was an intended restructuring of the business office and some job responsibility shuffling. Brawner noted that with Dave Keller's resignation, Nome Public Schools would need a new Director of Special Education the next school year. Sandy Harvey is the coordinator; however, the director needs to have a Type B certification. Brawner is willing to assume the additional duties of special education director in 2012-2013.

Within the business office, there currently four positions. Brawner is contemplating combining responsibilities into three positions and adding a new position titled, "Special Programs," with duties to include oversight of Northwest Community College Liaison, Career Technical Education, Pre K, Youth

Facility and the Extensions Home School Program. The Special Programs position would require a Type B certification as he or she would also be responsible for personnel matters and associated functions. This new position would assume responsibilities currently carried out by Jon Berkeley, director of federal programs, Bill Gartung, human resources and Michael Brawner, superintendent. Board member Gloria Karmun requested a cost analysis of the restructuring plan presented by Brawner.

Last on the agenda, discussion focused on the Legislative Fly-In where Brawner and two board members, Jennifer Reader and Barb Nickels, will meet with legislators. Brawner sought input from the board on topics they wanted to "plug." BSA (Base Student Allocation), bypass mail and CIP list (Capital Improvement Project) were all mentioned. It was determined that requesting an increase in the BSA would be a priority. Karmun added, "We also need to demonstrate, I think, that we're thankful." board specifically acknowledged House Bill 84 that helps fund the JROTC program.

Due to conflicts with a scheduled Valentine's Day regular meeting, the Nome Board of Education will meet instead on Thursday, February 16 at 5:30 p.m. in library of Nome Elementary School.

Nome Middle Schoolthumbs up or down?

By Lori Head

The issue seems to be twofold. Nome's 56'er group is comprised of 100 fifth and sixth graders and taught by four teachers, which produces a 25:1 student/teacher ratio. Michael Brawner, superintendent, would like to see that closer to a 20:1 ratio. Currently, at the junior high level the student/teacher ratio is approximately 15:1.

The other issue is reading scores. In October 2011, our fifth graders tested at 85 percent reading at the third to first grade level. Sixth graders fared better with only 52 percent reading two or more grade levels below grade level. However, the concern is clear and the question becomes how best to intervene academically.

"Your academic standing in sixth grade - you can take that and other factors surrounding it and you can accurately predict who has the highest likelihood of dropping out of school. So, if we're going to put in preventions, it needs to occur before sixth grade," explains Brawner.

In planning for 2012-2013. Brawner is presenting two options:

Option One

Leave the sixth graders at Nome Elementary School. Add one position, a dean of students, to oversee the fifth/sixth grade pod and move one staff member from junior high to the fifth/sixth grade. Also, change the junior/senior high school assistant principal to a dean of students.

Student/teacher ratios then become fifth/sixth grades at 17:1 and seventh/eighth grades at 23:1.

Pros: Keeps the 56'er concept intact, adds a dean of students to support the concept and reduces the student/teacher ratios in the fifth and sixth grades

Cons: Adds the cost of a dean of students.

Option Two

Move sixth graders out to the junior high school, forming a middle school instead, with sixth through eighth graders attending. Instead of an assistant principal have a middle school principal. Move one staff member from fifth/sixth grade to the middle school. No dean of students would be hired at the elementary school, and fifth graders may go back to self-contained classrooms rather than continue with 56'er concept. So, Nome Elementary would be a K-5 school with a principal, there would be a middle school with a principal and the senior high school would have a principal, but no assistant principal.

Student/teacher ratios then become fourth/fifth grades at 16:1 and sixth/seventh/eighth grades at 23:1.

Pros: No dean of students cost, lowers student/teacher ratios for fourth and fifth grades, and provides opportunities for advanced courses. Reduces students at elementary to 340, 140 at the middle school and 170 at the high school. Brawner points out that a school district begins to think about hiring an assistant principal when the student count reaches 350, so Option Two does lighten the elementary principal's administrative load.

Cons: School is further away and younger students are exposed to older students. There are also many logistics that would need to be taken care of, including schedules, lockers, lunches and busing.

Realizing the importance and value of input, Brawner will be seeking stakeholder's thoughts and opinions before any recommendation is made. His mind is not set on either option and he is interested in community member's thoughts and con-

It is the community's time to weigh in on this matter. There will be a community meeting on Tuesday, February 7 at 6:00 p.m. in the elementary school commons to discuss these two options. Or, folks can go to www.nomeschools.com and find a link in red that reads, "Should we move sixth grade?" Follow the link to two new links; one is a presentation of the two options and the other link is a single question survey titled, "Sixth Grade Planning Survey." BATTLE OF THE BOOKS - NES librarian Joy Hewitt takes answers as second graders waged the Battle of the Books last week.

District-wide Battle of the Books saw 230 participants

By Joy Hewitt

We all know that Nome Public Schools has a very popular sport contingency. Hundreds of community members fill the gym during the home basketball games. But did you know that there are more students of Nome Public Schools participating in Battle of the Books than basketball? OK, perhaps this is debatable, but just for the moment, let's honor the academic pursuits of these kids.

Nome Elementary School hosted the 2011-2012 District-wide Battle of Books competition for grades 1-6 last week with 230 students partici-

The Battle of Books is a competition that requires students to read from a list of 12 to 15 books. After months of reading and practice, they team up and battle each other by answering several questions from these Kids develop a pride in their reading ability and learn a little about teamwork (just in case they ever want to join a basketball team).

Representing Nome Public Schools in the state-wide Battle of Books at the end of February for grades 3 - 7 are: Brayden Bahnke, Audrey Lawrence, Katie Kelso, Sidney Kinneen, Dane Robinson, Ava Earthman, Bethany Daniels, Kristen Daniels, Jessica Noffsker, William Herzner, Cjache Kang, Bethany Hancock, Mollie Erikson, Chad Callahan, Sarah Mostoller, Paul Bioff and Conner Merrill.

Four more state competitors will qualify from a team of 16 Nome-Beltz High School students who will compete on Wednesday, February 1 in the District Battle. The kindergarten battles are scheduled for February 21 in the Nome Elementary School Library.

Reading — like shooting baskets and playing the piano — is a skill that gets better with practice.

And the students at Nome Public Schools are working hard to improve their reading skills. After all, our Nome Nanooks are students first, athletes second.

Lady Nanooks battle hard in Bethel Tournament

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Lady Nanooks basketball squad finished up what looked like could be a tough weekend with two victories, winning two out of the three games played this weekend in Bethel. The ladies, who lost a tough game the first day against Galena, battled back with convincing wins the next two days against Unalaska and host Bethel.

In the first game, the ladies played their hardest fought contest of the weekend, battling Galena the entire game back and forth, eventually falling 53-50. Nome, who was down one at halftime, stayed right with Galena for most of the second half, but was simply unable to ever get ahead for good. Senior captain Jenna Buchanan led Galena with a game high 23 points, while Nome was led by Devynn Johnson with 16 points. Dylan Johnson added 11 while Shayla Johnson was able to score 10 of

After what was a very tough loss for the Nanooks being so close the whole game, it would have been easy for the ladies to not play with passion the rest of the tournament. But that was far from what happened, as the loss seemed to drive the ladies to new levels as they dominated the rest of the weekend. The next game, they got out of the gates strong outscoring Unalaska 33-9 at halftime, eventually resulting in a 59-21 route victory. Shayla Johnson had a big game, as she led all scorers with 17 points. Dylan Johnson added 15 points as well for the ladies. The defense was the story of the game as the ladies used their height to their advantage only allowing an incredible 21 points all game.

With the final game against Bethel, the Nome ladies did not stop their momentum from the last game, as again they were able to win convincingly, 52-29. Devynn Johnson led the scoring for the Nanooks again with 18 points, while Shayla Johnson had another great game with 16 points of her own. Shayla Johnson scored in double figures all three games over the weekend, as she is really starting to make a huge name for herself on this squad as the season has progressed. Kira Polk of Bethel had 18 points, but simply could not get support from any other member of the Lady Warriors.

The weekend at Bethel has been typical of what kind of up and down season the Lady Nanooks have had thus far. But the weekend proved that the ladies from Nome have plenty of heart and do not let one game get to them, which is encouraging for later in the season.

The ladies next head to Anchorage for the Lady Lynx Tournament in what will perhaps be their stiffest competition faced yet this season. It begins this Wednesday and goes through Saturday.

Nanooks Boys win thriller in Bethel, sweep Bethel Tournament

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Nanooks boys basketball squad continue to be road warriors, again winning all three games played away from home last weekend, this time at the Bethel Tournament. With teams from Bethel, Unalaska and Galena, it provided the Nanooks with some strong conference competition and made for some exciting games.

In the first game, the Nanooks were able to escape with a 67-62 win in overtime over Galena. Galena started the game out slow with only a 23 point first half, but stormed back with 35 points in the second half. However, in overtime the Nanooks were able to do enough to hang on for the victory. Nathan Blandford was again tremendous for the Nanooks, putting up a game high 31 points while adding 9 rebounds and 5 steals. Tyler Eide added 16 points along with an astounding 11 steals. Jens Irelan also had another game in double figures, scoring an additional 14. The Nanooks finished the game with 20 steals, playing very scrappy as always on defense. The story of the game however was the ability to get to the foul line. Nome took 21 free throw attempts, making 17 of them compared to only four attempts total for Galena.

In the next game against Un-alaska, it wasn't quite the same challenge as the day before against Galena. The Nanooks were able to win in comfortable fashion, 47-31. It did not take very long for that comfort to set in for the Nanooks either as they jumped out to an 18-2 first quarter advantage. Again, Blandford led the scoring for the Nanooks with a game high 19 points. No other player for Nome scored in double figures, but it was not needed as their defense completely shut down Un-

In the final game the following day, it was prime to be one of the tougher tests for the Nanooks all season as they took on the host Bethel Warriors. The game did not disappoint, as again the Nanooks were able to win 51-50, in what was perhaps the best game played all season by Nome. Tyler Eide, who had a game high 22 points for the Nanooks, hit a three pointer with 1.1 seconds remaining to give Nome a 1 point lead. It was a huge shot considering the circumstances of Bethel fans cheering for their team. Theodore Naneng, who led the Warriors with 15 points, had two free throws with 11 seconds remaining. He was able to make the first, but then missed the second, giving Eide the opportunity to make the three pointer for the victory. It was a game of two different halves as Nome held a 32-17 lead at halftime, but squandered the 15-point lead in the second half, eventually pulling out the victory. Zach Sullivan added an additional 10 points, while Blandford added 9 points.

The Nanooks, who remain with only one blemish on their season. continue to look like a team that has a chance to fight for the state championship. Their combination of scoring and tough defense has been something that few other teams have been able to figure out or keep up with. The Nanooks boys next head to Kotzebue on Friday for a two game

Nome NYO winter kick off

By Joni Earp

Twenty-seven students showed up Saturday to compete in the Winter Kick Off, a NYO meet for the Nome Elementary Wolverines young team. answers to the question, "Why do you think you kicked so much higher during the competition?" Their smiles and confidence said it all. Inspired.... Dynamite!

The meet proved challenging to our athletes, pushing the young Wolverines beyond their limits, often surprising themselves and challenging one another. Though most of the athletes there were first time competitors, they carried themselves with the air of seasoned competitors. Students in third through sixth grade competed in a two-event "kick off"

"1,2,3, Dynamite" was the cheer to end the Nome Elementary School's NYO meet on Saturday, January 21. The motto was created earlier in the season when the students were asked to come up with a word or saying to help inspire them. The word Dynamite has various definitions in the Webster dictionary. To an outsider looking in, one may competition— the Alaskan High Kick and the One Foot High Kick.

Staying true to the spirit of Native Youth Olympics, the students inspired and encouraged one another. Madison Johnson, a sixth grader and first time competitor said, "I was inspired by my classmates, watching how they were doing." One could say that NYO has an unwritten rule; sportsmanship earns just as much respect as performance.

Highlights of the event include a seven round challenge between Emily Pomrenke and Taeler Brunette in the One Foot High Kick. Pomrenke took the win with a height of 69 inches. Pomrenke kicked the final eight inches on her own, challenging her personal best by over 10 inches. "I perform better under pressure," stated Pomrenke.

The boys also put on a show with the One Foot. Harrison Moore, and Jaime Yi went head to head in the final five rounds, vying for first place. Moore, and Yi both kicked their personal best on Saturday, with Harrison taking it to the height of 66 inches. The one foot high kick is a notoriously nerve-wracking event. Not only is one kicking by themselves, but they have to have the athletic awareness to kick a small ball hanging from the ceiling with accuracy for anywhere of up to 20 times during a single competition. Both Pomerenke and Moore did not have see it as a "kid thing." The Wolverines know otherwise. The students unanimously agreed to choose the word when asked... there was no need to explain the importance of remembering the late Jamison Thrun, a classmate most of the students were very close to before losing him this fall to a tragic accident.

The Wolverines will meet again on February 11 in the Nome Elementary gym for another kicking competition. Thanks to funding from Sitnasuak Native Corporation, the top four male and female competitors will travel to Anchorage to compete against hundreds of other athletes from around Alaska at Begich Middle School February 16 -18. Community members are welcome to come encourage their team

How to Save a Life

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Saving a life during a heart attack or stroke is usually dramatic. Sirens blare, CPR is performed. Medication and fluids are pushed through intravenous lines. Lungs are intubated. Cardiologists and surgeons open blocked vessels to restore lifegiving flow of blood. If caught in time, a life is saved.

But what if a heart attack or stroke could be stopped years, even decades, before a dramatic "heartstopping" event?

Perhaps it can. According to a new study in New England Journal of Medicine, the lifetime chances of dying from a heart attack or stroke can be predicted as early as age 45.

The NEJM researchers looked back at data gathered over 50 years from around a quarter of a million men and women of different ethnic backgrounds and found four consistent risk factors for developing cardiovascular disease. These risks include: elevated blood pressure, elevated cholesterol, smoking and dia-

Surprisingly, a man with no risk factors (normal blood pressure, normal cholesterol, non-smoker, and normal glucose levels) at age 45 has only a 1.4 percent chance of ever dying from a heart attack or stroke. But a man with two or more risk factors has a 49.5 percent of dying of a cardiovascular disorder. The percentages for women are similar.

This means that if you were to pick a hundred healthy 45-year-olds with no risk factors and follow them for a lifetime, only about two of them will die from a heart attack or stroke. But if the same group is made up of smokers, or people with high blood pressure, high cholesterol, or diabetes, up to half of them will experience a life-ending cardiovascular event.

The authors of the study found a similar trend when looking at people at age 55, 65, and 75 years old.

The goal then is to reach each decade of life with optimal control of the four risk factors. And the good news is that each risk factor can be controlled.

Blood pressure can be controlled with weight loss, daily activity, and a healthy diet. If blood pressure remains elevated medications are available to lower the pressure to healthy levels.

Cholesterol levels respond to daily activity, a balanced diet rich in vegetables and healthy oils, as found in salmon and nuts, and reduced amounts of simple sugar. Medications can be used to further lower cholesterol when necessary.

Smoking cessation is not easy, but stopping is possible. In some cases medication can help ease the cravings, though, for most people, success begins with a decision to quit, and medication plays only a minor role. It is important to remember that the simple act of cessation is buying years of quality life, not just for the smoker but also for everyone exposed to the smoke second-hand.

Even diabetes is largely preventable. The Diabetes Prevention Program, a nationwide study that includes patients from the Norton Sound region, has proven that the progression from pre-diabetes to diabetes can be prevented with weight loss, a healthy diet, and 30 minutes of physical activity daily. When diabetes develops, the proper mix of medication and lifestyle can keep a person's blood sugar at healthy lev-

I suspect the community would not tolerate blaring sirens every time a person's blood pressure or cholesterol were high. And performing the Heimlich maneuver and CPR on every smoker who lit up in public would seem a bit over-the-top. But the data suggests that controlling four simple risk factors should be considered just as profound as any other life-saving measures. The difference is when a life is saved and the quality of life thereafter.

ahead. This saves the community from bearing the expense of air transportation for emergency fuel.

I'd like to commend the Sitnasuak Native Corporation for their leadership to get the fuel delivered. Sitnasuak owns the local fuel company, Bonanza Fuel, and has been working closely with Vitus Marine, the supplier that arranged for the delivery of the 1.3 million gallons of fuel. Without the Renda's delivery, it is estimated Nome would run out of fuel by March or April, long before the next barge delivery is possible.

I, along with other state, federal, local, and tribal representatives have been monitoring the delivery and corresponding with the Coast Guard. We appreciate the Coast Guard working with the city, the state, and industry to address this issue. I am grateful for their effort and support the USCGC S/V Healy's continued presence until the fuel is delivered and the delivery vessels leave Alaskan waters.

Once again, I offer my sincere thanks to the Coast Guard for its efforts. I believe this incident highlights the US and global development of Arctic wa-

Alaska Coastal Management Program

I have been fully supportive of the Statewide Ballot Initiative to bring back the Alaska Coastal Management Program (ACMP). I am very thankful to all of those Alaskans that added their signature to petition booklets endorsing the restoration of the ACMP. The Alaska Sea Party announced that it reached the requirement of 26,000 signatures by the start of this year's legislative session. It was announced that more than 33,500 voters signed this important petition and I'd like to thank those rural Alaskans for contributing about 1/3 or approximately 12,000 signatures to put this initiative on this year's ballot. I understand this particular petition was the fastest initiative signature gathering effort in Alaska's history, which shows this program is very much needed. The ACMP allows for local input in developing our coastal resources and gives our state primacy over federal developments in our coast. I commend each voter for signing their names and showing our government that the people's voice will not be ignored. I will be closely monitoring the movement of this ballot initiative and will be strongly supportive of any bills that will be introduced calling for the restoration of the ACMP. The Division of Elections will take 60 days to review every signature against the voter registration

Honors

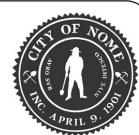

Along with Sen. Mark Begich, Sen. Lisa Murkowski nominated Nome's Elizabeth Herzner to be accepted to the U.S Military Academy at West Point, New York. Herzner is one of 37 young Alaskans for appointment to the U.S. military service academies for the class of 2016. "This year's nominees are stellar candidates who embody the leadership capabilities and strong characters we expect from our men and women in uniform," Murkowski said. "It is a privilege to nominate such accomplished Alaskans for admission to our service academies." Nominees were selected based on their academic record, extracurricular activities and potential for leadership. Sen. Murkowski's nominees will now compete against other nationwide candidates for a space in the entering class. A congressional nomination does not guarantee admission to a service academy; service academies will make the final decisions.

Credit Union 1 announces hunger-fighting fund's 2011 total

In 2011, Credit Union 1 (CU1) created the One for All Alaska Fund as a vehicle to raise money throughout the state for the credit union's yearly community service focus, which was fighting hunger. Organizations that work to help Alaskans in need were chosen as beneficiaries in each community where CU1 has a branch. All donations remained in the communities in which they were raised.

A grand total of $14,172.66 was distributed from the One for All Alaska Fund to the following organizations: Dare to Care (Anchorage), The Children's Lunchbox (Anchorage), Chugiak-Eagle River Food Pantry (Eagle River), North Star Council on Aging, Meals on Wheels Program (Fairbanks), Kenai Peninsula Food Bank (Soldotna), Kodiak Island Food Bank (Kodiak), Nome Community Food Bank (Nome), Ketchikan Salvation Army Food Programs (Ketchikan).

PUBLIC NOTICE FEMA-4050-DR-AK

The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) hereby gives notice to the public of its intent to reimburse eligible applicants for eligible costs to repair and/or replace facilities damaged by Severe Winter Storms and Flooding that occurred from November 8 through November 10, 2011. This notice applies to the Public Assistance (PA) and Hazard Mitigation Grant (HMGP) programs implemented under the authority of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act, 42 U.S.C. §§ 5121-5206.

Under the major disaster declaration (FEMA-4050-DR-AK) signed by the President on December 22, 2011, the North Slope Borough, the Bering Strait Regional Educational Attendance Area (REAA), the Lower Kuskokwim REAA, the Lower Yukon REAA, and the Southwest Region REAA have been designated as adversely affected by the disaster and eligible for PA funding. All boroughs and REAAs in the State of Alaska are eligible for HMGP funding. Under the major disaster declaration HMGP funding.

This public notice concerns activities that may affect historic properties, activities that are located in or affect wetland areas or the 100-year floodplain, and critical actions within the 500-year floodplain. Such activities may adversely affect the historic property, flood-plain, or wetland; or may result in continuing vulnerability to flood damage.

Presidential Executive Orders 11988 and 11990 require that all federal actions in or affecting the floodplain or wetlands be reviewed for opportunities to relocate, and be evaluated for social, economic, historical, environmental, legal and safety considerations. Where there is no opportunity to relocate, FEMA is required to undertake a detailed review to determine what measures can be taken to minimize fu-ture damages. The public is invited to partici-pate in the process of identifying alternatives and analyzing their impacts.

FEMA has determined that for certain types of facilities there are normally no alternatives or restoration in the floodplain/wetland. These are facilities that meet all of the following criteria: 1) FEMA's estimate of the cost of repairs is less than 50% of the cost to replace the entire facility, and is less than $100,000; 2) the trie facility, and is less than $100,000; 2) the facility is not located in a floodway; 3) the facility has not sustained major structural damage in a previous Presidentially declared flooding disaster or emergency; and 4) the facility is not critical (e.g., the facility is not a hospital, generating plant, emergency operations center, or a facility that contains dangerous materials). FEMA intends to provide assistance for the restoration of these facilities to their pre-disaster condition, except that certain measures to mitigate the effects of future flooding or other hazards may be included in the work. For example, a bridge or culvert restoration may include a larger waterway opening to decrease the risk of future washouts.

For routine activities, this will be the only public notice provided. Other activities and public horder provided. Other activities and those involving facilities that do not meet the four criteria are required to undergo more detailed review, including study of alternative locations. Subsequent public notices regarding such projects will be published if necessary, as more specific information becomes avail-

In many cases, an applicant may have started facility restoration before federal intolvement. Even if the facility must undergo detailed review and analysis of alternative locations, FEMA will fund eligible restoration at the original location if the facility is functionally dependent on its floodplain location (e.g., bridges and flood control facilities), the project facilitates an open space use, or the facility is an integral part of a larger network that is impractical or uneconomical to relocate, such as a road. In such cases, FEMA must also examine the possible effects of not restoring the facility, minimize floodplain/wetland impacts, and determine both that an overriding public need for the facility clearly outweighs the Executive Order requirements to avoid the floodplain/wetland, and that the site is the only practicable alternative. State of Alaska and local officials will confirm to FEMA that proposed actions comply with all applicable State posed actions comply with all applicable State and local floodplain management and wetland protection requirements.

FEMA also intends to provide HMGP funding to the State of Alaska for projects that mitigate future disaster damages. These projects may include construction of new facilities; relocation of facilities; relocation of facilities; relocation of facilities out of floodplains; demolition of facilities out of floodplains; demolities of facilities for facilities of facilities for facilities of facilities for facilities facilities for facilities for facilities olition of structures; or other types of projects to mitigate future disaster damages. In the course of developing project proposals, sub-sequent public notices will be published, if necessary, as more specific information be-

The National Historic Preservation Act requires federal agencies to take into account the effects of their undertakings on historic properties. Those actions or activities affecting buildings, structures, districts, or objects 50 years old or older or that affect archaeological sites or undisturbed ground will require further review to determine if the property is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places (Register). If the property is determined to be eligible for the Register, and FEMA's undertaking will adversely affect it, FEMA will provide additional public notices. For historic properties not adversely affected For historic properties not adversely affected by FEMA's undertaking, this will be the only

As noted, this may be the only public notice regarding the above-described actions under the PA and HMGP programs. Interested persons may obtain information about these actions or a specific project by writing to the Federal Emergency Management Agency, Joint Field Office, 222 West 8th Avenue, Suite #A13, Anchorage, AK 99513, or by calling (907) 271-4300/4340. Comments should be sent in writing to Mr. Willie Nunn, Federal Coordinating Officer, at the above address within 15 days of the date of this notice.

PUBLIC MEETINGS

Effects of Oil and Gas Activities in the Arctic Ocean Draft Environmental Impact Statement

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's (NOAA) National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) invites everyone to attend upcoming public meetings. NMFS has prepared a Draft Environmental Impact Statement (DEIS) to analyze the impacts of issuing marine mammal Incidental Take Authorizations to the oil and gas industry during offshore exploration activities (e.g., seismic surveys and exploratory drilling) in federal and state waters of the U.S. Chukchi and Beaufort seas. Comments must be received by February 28, 2012.

The format for the public meetings will consist of an open house, followed by an opportunity for comments. During the open house, representatives from NMFS, the cooperating agencies, and third-party EIS team will be available to discuss the project and answer questions. The public meetings will be documented by a court

Please contact Michael Payne, NMFS Office of Protected Resources, (301) 713-0376 or visit the project website for more information: http://www.nmfs.noaa.gov/pr/permits/eis/arctic.htm Requests for sign language interpretation or auxiliary aids should be made at least 10 days before the

Regional planning team tackles new salmon plan

By Diana Haecker

The Norton Sound/Bering Strait salmon regional planning team met in Nome last week, after a five-year hiatus since their last meeting, and decided to come up with a new comprehensive salmon plan.

Members of the public gave their input and commented to the effect that they wanted more salmon and that they are in favor of salmon run enhancement projects. The purpose of the regional planning team, or RPT for short, is to develop a regional comprehensive salmon plan, to make recommendations for private non-profit hatchery permits and for fish resource permits. "This meeting was a catch-up meeting to exchange ideas and hear of projects that worked or didn't work," said Sam Rabung with the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. The main actions taken during the meeting were appointing Rabung as the RTP chair and getting the ball rolling on updating a new comprehensive salmon

Rabung explained that Alaska's salmon fishery enhancement program is stakeholder driven. "Therefore the decision to proceed is in the hands of local salmon users," Rabung wrote in an email. "That being said, the hatchery program in Alaska produces a lot of fish. But hatcheries are just one of the tools available and may or may not be appropriate for every location."

While subsistence users would like to see more fish reaching Norton Sound and the Bering Strait, Jim Menard, with the ADF&G division of commercial fisheries in Nome, said that the last decade saw the greatest returns of pink, silver runs, and even sockeye. Chum salmon also seem to have recovered. But the red salmon run crashed in both Glacial Lake and Salmon Lake areas in the past couple of years, for reasons not well understood. Menard said that chum salmon are slowly making a comeback in greater numbers after the chum runs crashed in the 1980s. Chum are under strict harvest management, but Menard said that there hasn't been a Tier 2 situation since 2005. ADF&G RPT member Brendan Scanlon even said that there is a possibility that ADF&G will submit a proposal to the Board of Fish to relax the strict chum management and open a commercial fishery, if chum numbers keep increasing.

When asked about the long meeting hiatus between the last RPT meeting in 2006 and last week's gathering, Rabung said that the money that supported the RPT was derived from a voluntary commercial fishermen's tax that funded the Regional Aquaculture Association, or RAA. The RAA is a key player as it appoints three members of the sixmember voting Regional Planning Team, which in turn makes recommendations to the ADF&G commissioner. Rabung said that as commercial fisheries in the Norton Sound and Bering Strait area declined, so did the money for the

To complicate matters, there are two very similarly named aquaculture associations, one chaired by Tim Smith called the Norton Sound/Bering Strait Regional Aquaculture Association and the one led by Oscar Takak, called Norton Sound/Bering Straits Regional Aquaculture Association. The latter is recognized by ADF&G, but Tim Smith contests the validity of the recognition.

The RPT has an advisory function to the Commissioner of Fish and Game, and is supposed to be stakeholder-driven in its development of the comprehensive plan. The RPT team consists of six voting members: three representatives from the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game, and three representatives appointed by the regional Aquaculture Association, or RAA. On the ADF&G side are John Linderman, Brendan Scanlon and Ron Josephson. The three appointees by the RAA are Oscar Takak, Charlie Lean and Simon Kinneen. Takak is the chair of the Norton Sound/Bering Straits Regional Aquaculture Association. Takak is also a board member of the Norton Sound Development Corp. Charlie Lean also represents the NS/BS RAA and is a biologist for NSEDC; Simon Kinneen represents NSEDC. Three non-voting ex-officio members are representatives from the federal Bureau of Land Management. Kawerak Inc. and the Nome Fishermen's Association. Those were represented by Tom Sparks, Rose Fosdick and Tim Smith, respectively. Charlie Lean has been charged to start drafting a new version of the salmon comprehensive plan. Lean said the plan is setting goals of which salmon species the public wants to see in which river and in what num-

Lean said that the plan in the end will be a list of pre-approved ideas and projects that can run the gamut between full-blown fish hatcheries to simple enhancement projects like fish ladders or habitat restoration. Lean also differentiates between projects that restore salmon runs to historic levels or enhancement projects that increase those salmon return numbers even further. The draft of the comprehensive plan is to be presented to the next meeting set for April 25. After that, meetings will take place in the fall or early winter of 2012 in every village in Norton Sound, on St. Lawrence Island, and the four Bering Strait villages to gather input before writing up another draft that would go back to the RPT for discussion and to be voted Rabung said that the main topic at the next meeting in Nome will be a review of the starting draft of the comprehensive salmon plan and direction on moving the drafting process forward.

Aurora Borealis puts on show

Nomeites endure coldest January on record

By Diana Haecker

The northern skies have been crackling with Aurora Borealis activity over the past two weeks. Space physicists at the UAF Geophysical Institute link the activity to three solar events on Jan. 18, 19 and 23, when Aurora forecaster Prof. Charles Deehr issued alerts for higher-thannormal aurora activity.

According to the Geophysical Institute, the Aurora is a luminous glow of the upper atmosphere, caused by energetic particles that enter the atmosphere from above.

The cause of aurora are energetic particles, electrons and protons that are energized from the interaction of the Earth's magnetosphere with the solar wind.

Aurora watchers around Nome had to dress for the occasion as the National Weather Service announced that January 2012 is entering the record books as the coldest month ever, since NWS collected climate data in Nome.

The current record holder was January 1989 when the average temperature was -15.2°F. January 2012 beat that all-time record with an average temperature of -16.1°F.

The temperature this January was on average 20 degrees colder than what is considered "normal."

Tuesday, Jan. 31 saw a temperature low of -37°F and the Weather Service remarked that the only way that January 2012 would fall short of the all-time coldest January on record would be if the high temperature would rise to 61°F.

So far, it doesn't look like that is happening as the high for Tuesday reached a temperature of -23°F.

Arctic issues: NWTF warns Alaska to develop strategy

By Diana Haecker

When the Alaska Legislature created the Northern Waters Task Force 18 months ago, it was to put the finger on the pulse of Arctic development and to outline what Alaska lawmakers should do to position the state for success. Little did task force members at the time know that they'd be faced with a monumental task to sift through immense amounts of complex information spanning international interests for the race to the north - where once resources locked up by multi-year ice were out of reach for development.

"It was overwhelming at first," said task force chair Rep. Reggie Joule (D-Kotzebue) during the final presentation of the NWTF findings last week in Juneau. The issues, he said, cut across state, federal and international jurisdiction. "We were dazzled and overwhelmed," Joule said of the initial hearings held to gather input from the Alaskan public, researchers and experts.

Last week, the Northern Waters Task force ceased to exist when it presented its 37-page report to the full legislature with the recommendation to establish an Alaska Arctic Commission, tasked with the development of a state strategy for the Arctic. The report prepped Alaskan lawmakers to wrap their minds around a daunting challenge that thrust the state into what Rep. Bryce Edgmon likened to the race to the moon. "There is so much happening at the international, federal and state level that we weren't even aware of," Edgmon said. "It's kind of like the race to the moon.'

The task force's findings ooze the sobering realization that the challenge of this time in Alaskan history lies in the failure or success of securing a front seat in the formulation of Arctic governance, oil and gas development, fisheries, research and marine traffic. Many other countries have a head start by virtue of having signed the Law of the Sea treaty, by having recognized that icebreakers are the key to unlocking the north's

Bonanza's new prices slide under Crowley pump prices

By Sandra L. Medearis

The other shoe has fallen. Bonanza Fuel, Inc. posted new prices this week after it received its final shipment of fuel through a first-time winter delivery. A Russian ice class tanker, escorted by the USCG icebreaker Healy delivered about $1.4 million gallons of fuel to Bonanza's storage tanks last month.

Crowley has said it would not raise its prices should Bonanza have to reach for the moon to cover the fuel delivery.

High harvest royalties drive NSEDC's 2011 profits to $11.4 million Company rakes in revenues, rolls out grants and donations

By Laurie McNicholas

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. reports a profit of $11.4 million for 2011, with total net assets of 155.6 million and total liabilities of $30.4 million on Dec. 31. At the end if 2010, liabilities totaled 20.7 million.

The year-end figures for 2011 are preliminary because some transactions have yet to be processed, NSEDC Controller Rick Walicki told the board of directors at a meeting Jan. 31 in Nome.

Walicki said harvesting revenues rose to nearly $23 million in 2011, up by about $7.7 million from $15.3 million in harvest royalties in the previous year. NSEDC and its wholly-owned, for profit subsidiary Siu Alaska Corp. greatly expanded their investments in Bering Sea pollock, crab and cod fisheries in 2011.

A large increase in the total allowable catch of Bering Sea pollock also helped boost harvest revenues last year. The pollock TAC rose from 815,000 metric tons in 2010 to more than 1.2 million metric tons in 2011.

The total value of NSEDC's securities investment portfolio rose from $71 million at the end of 2010 to $71.7 million on Dec. 31, 2011, an approximate increase of $700,000. In 2010 the company reported portfolio profits of $7 million. NSEDC's Communications Director Tyler Rhodes provided the 2011 portfolio profit figure at the request of The Nome Nugget.

"While NSEDC always aims for strong returns on its investments, we are satisfied that our investments held their value in a year where the market experienced a large amount of volatility," Rhodes commented.

Memorial race receives funds

On Jan. 31 NSEDC board members OKed a $50,000 donation to the Paul Johnson Memorial Norton Sound 450 sled dog race from Unalakleet to Nome and back. Johnson was a past member of the NSEDC board and served as a director of Siu Alaska Corp. at the time of his death on Oct. 14, 2011. The race began Feb. 8.

Dear Editor

Well now that all the hoopla over the delivery of fuel to ice-bound Nome and the habitat of the endangered spectacled eider has been avoided, it's time to consider the plight of the spectacled crabber.

This is my fourth winter commercial crabbing in Nome. There's about a three-mile zone either side of the harbor that is closed to commercial crabbing. My experience, and those who have done this much longer than I, is that the ice west of Nome is more stable that that to the east. I had four pots four miles west and 10 pots from five to eight miles west of the harbor. I went to check my crab pots on Sunday, January 22 and nine of the 10 pots furthest west were gone.

There's always a risk of losing pots during winter crabbing when pieces of the shorefast ice break off, so I'm not complaining too loudly that losing all that ice to the west coincided with the departure of the Healy and Renda and gusty north winds on Saturday. Although I do appreciate having fuel to run around on the sea ice while checking crab pots, I am firmly in the camp of ice huggers.

I can't do anything about gusty north winds, but it would be great not to ever have icebreakers loosening up our shore fast ice ever again. Which is to say I'm against further icebreaking in Norton Sound without consideration of the spectacled crabber habitat

I read in the Anchorage Daily News that the Bering Sea snow crabbers are complaining about too much ice and are worried about losing gear at $1,000 a pot, so I guess I'll be grateful that I only lost $1,400 worth of gear.

Sincerely, Frank Carruthers Nome, AK 99762

Dear Editor:

It's great the Norton Sound Salmon RPT met and decided to spend a few years putting together another 10 year salmon plan after the expiration of the previous 10 year plan. With the same folks running the show (into the tundra).

Charlie Lean and Jim Menard know why there are no salmon in Salmon Lake. They, those responsible for the project, quit feeding them. After record escapement the Salmon Lake fertilization project was terminated. Salmon smolt were starved to near extinction.

State personnel have even taken the incubators from the hatchery here. I asked respectfully at the meeting as a gesture of good faith for their return. If you plan to restore runs why cripple a hatchery in the first place?

It would seem more productive to reinstate the previous plan in the interim until the next plan is in place. By the time all is said and done under the current regime, all that are likely to be hatched is empty promises and per diem checks.

Mr. Rabung, the state biologist presiding at the meeting, has a distinguished career behind him in salmon enhancement. But his suggestion to a group of us in favor of a hatchery outside the meeting, was to form another non regional aquaculture association as has been done in Southeast Alaska.

What is operational just beneath the surface is the vast political reverse auction of ethical depravity, funded by antipoverty funds. It is a political ghetto, and the quickest way to a 10 dollar bill is to be mercenary, for a corporate interest, against the public welfare. It is the norm out here rather than the exception for a publicly funded effort, led or influenced by a nonprofit to fail. There is a communal yawn in Norton Sound at yet another corporate fiasco. And the same clot of entitled poverty pimps keep us 20 years, and growing, behind aquaculture efforts in the rest of the state, that have really benefited their regions.

King Salmon in Norton Sound have been mismanaged to the brink. Red salmon the same. Hatchery ripped off. Tier 2 imposed over the united consensus of the community in disdain of it. And now a commercial salmon fishery is planned in Nome while we are still under the subsistence restrictions of Tier 2?

Do you have another 20 years? Respectfully, Eric Osborne Nome, AK

Pretty Sneaky

It seems that the concept of open government is not well understood by the government. The US Army Corps of Engineers invites public comment but feels it is under no obligation to notify the public when there is something to comment upon. The US Environmental Protection Agency wants public input on oil drilling in the Arctic but sees no reason to hold public meetings in Nome. They hide behind budget restraints. Not to be outdone by our own government, Norway's Stat Oil had a meeting in Nome to explain their scientific findings in the Chukchi and Beaufort seas. Seems the only public notice to the benighted people of Nome was a piece of paper on the bulletin board at Nome City Hall one day prior to their meeting.

It seems government— state, federal and international —want to keep us in the dark. It also seems that they don't want to hear about subsistence and environmental concerns. At times when the well being of our planet is in jeopardy, we need to do all we can to keep our water clean and air pure. Government can be sneaky. The Alaska Department of Natural Resources wants to change its mission statement so that it is to develop our resources at all cost and to heck with the environment. In keeping with the findings of the Northern Waters Task Force Alaskans must be provided with meaningful opportunities to participate in Arctic Policy and Outer Continental Shelf decisions... particularly with those Alaskans likely to be most impacted by evolving conditions.

Nomeites and residents of western Alaska have a duty to maintain vigilance. Keep after our state and federal governments to keep the public informed. They need to hear loud and clear from the folks who live here. They should not obfuscate the process of public comment. They should bend over backward to keep citizens informed. They should not think of us as the enemy. Let's not let the bureaucrats forget that openness is good government. —N.L.M.—

RECLAMATION PLAN APPROVED - The Dept. of Natural Resources ok'd the final reclamation and closure plan for NovaGold Resources' Rock Creek gold mine near Nome.

DNR approves final reclamation plan for Rock Creek mine

By Diana Haecker

The Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources approved the final reclamation plan for the closure of NovaGold Resources Inc.'s failed Rock Creek mine near Nome. NovaGold's subsidiary Alaska Gold Company was the project owner and is now the applicant for the reclamation and closure plan. Although the DNR director of the Division of Mining, Land and Water Joe Wehrman has signed the reclamation plan approval last Friday, it does not go into effect until the company posts $20.27 million financial assurance. Steve McGroarty with the DNR said that this should happen this week.

After the money has been posted, the plan is valid from Feb. 3 through Feb. 2, 2017.

Still, there is the possibility that the mine may find a new owner and go into production.

Bering Straits Native Corporation, the regional Native Corporation that owns land that the mine partially sits on, is also negotiating with the mine owners to take over the mine infrastructure and revive the project. As of Monday, however, no new developments have materialized, said BSNC CEO and president Gail Schubert.

Mike Young, a Fairbanks resident, North Star Borough assembly member and gold miner with the Bering Gold Group interested in acquiring Rock Creek, pleaded with DNR during the public comment period to "please delay or refuse to issue this closure permit for a short period of time." The DNR's answer was that if Alaska Gold's business plans change, they could request a temporary closure or a suspension of their reclamation efforts.

In the DNR document in response to public comments, DNR addressed the question of what happens if a new owner comes into play. The first step would be that the reclamation plan would have to be amended and would need approval by the commissioner. This approval would free the current mine owner from its obligations if the operation is in full compliance, if the successor assumes full responsibility and liability of the approved reclamation plan and if the bonding requirements are met.

If a takeover of the mine produces a new owner before reclamation is complete, McGroarty explained, there would be the need to get the current tailings facility back into operation. It would require a certificate of approval to repair a dam, an amendment to the current reclamation and closure plan and an application for a new waste management permit would be required from the DEC and that would require public notice.

"In other words, if a new owner takes over the project, they have to comply with the authorizations that currently exist and these to not envision the resumption of mining activities," McGroarty wrote. "If the new owner wants to start mining again, they will have to submit applications to state and possibly federal regulatory agencies."

McGroarty said that the project still has a DEC Waste Management and waste water discharge permit in effect. "The DNR Dam Safety and Construction unit will be issuing a certificate of approval to abandon the Tailings dam, McGroarty wrote in an email exchange with The Nome Nugget.

If, however, no new owner steps in and the reclamation goes ahead as planned, it would mean the permanent cessation and abandonment of mining and milling operations at Rock Creek, according to the document. The reclamation is complete when all terms and conditions have been met, when active water treatment is not required for any water discharged from the facility, surface water from the mine site or facilities meets water quality criteria and when all ground water discharge below the facilities meets DEC standards and when a stable vegetative cover is established.

TO THE DUMP, TO THE DUMP, TO THE DUMP-DUMP-DUMP — Nome city and state snow removal crews add to the supply at the Nome snow dump on Monday.

Cold snap ends, temperature soars to balmy 26° F

By Diana Haecker

After more than a month of below normal temperatures and recordbreaking cold, a pineapple train came rushing through the region, bringing warm air and lots of snow over the weekend.

Mother Nature had a big mood swing and went from a low temperature of -38°F on Friday to 26°F above zero on Saturday night, reports National Weather Service meteorological technician Jim Hancock. Winds peaked at noon on Saturday with 49 mph and a total of 9.9 inches of snow flew sideways creating huge snowdrifts in Nome and the surrounding area.

Nome Joint Utilities manager John Handeland reported only one distribution outage that left residents along the Beam Road and all the way to Banner Creek without power for four hours on Saturday. "Conditions were such that line crew identified the problem but the weather was too bad to climb the poles," Handeland said. Power was restored around

6:30 p.m., just in time to fire up the stove and put dinner in the oven. Handeland said that line slapping caused minor blips in other areas, but no complete outages. While Nomeites hunkered down and waited out the storm, air traffic also came to a complete halt on Saturday. On Sunday, 2.8 inches of snow came down, bringing the total snow on the ground to 30 inches.

Road crews are still busy on Tuesday removing snow from the streets. The warmth was also a welcome relief for Elementary school kids who could finally play outside again, after 24 days of inside recess due to the bitter cold weather.

Bonanza fuel prices

Monday, Bonanza's pumps at Seppala Drive and Bering Street showed prices-$5.95 for unleaded and $6.20 for ultra low sulfur diesel fuel--just under competitor Crowley's pump prices-$5.98 for unleaded gasoline and $6.26 for ultra low sulfur diesel fuel.

Bonanza Fuel is owned by Sitnasuak Native Corp. It's board chairman, Jason Evans, said at the beginning of the project that he did not expect Bonanza's prices to reach media-predicted prices of $9 a gallon even if Sitnasuak had to fly in fuel, as he would have to consider Bonanza's competition from Crowley. Evans and his fuel board could not set the price for fuel until the Renda had safely reached its homeport in Vladivostok, he said.

Sitnasuak was able to save money by pairing with Vitus Marine to charter the tanker Renda. The Renda picked up fuel in South Korea and Dutch Harbor, then followed the Healy to Nome.

In December, Evans told The Nugget there was sufficient heating fuel in town, but that there was a shortage of vehicle fuel; however, in January he revised that estimate, saying unusually cold weather had drained heating fuel supplies. The ultra low sulfur diesel-ULSDcould be used as heating fuel, Evans

Later in January, Evans said that even with the fuel delivered by the tanker, he might have to look at flying in additional fuel before spring. The Renda was in open water, still en route to Vladivostok Monday. Evans could not be reached on short notice to ask about the early raise in prices or to ask if consumers should look for another adjustment.

Temperatures for the past month, clinging to the -30°F to 40°F range warmed to the positive 20s and 30s over the weekend.

New owner of Federal Building still unknown

By Diana Haecker

Four months after the auction of the Federal Building on Nome's Front Street produced a successful bidder, the sale has yet to be finalized and the General Services Agency has yet to announce the new owner's identity. However, there were reports of the new owner touring the facility. The online auction of the building ended in September with a final bid amount of $1.681 million.

Stephanie Kenitzer, GSA spokeswoman, said in an email exchange with The Nome Nugget that the closing of the sale has been delayed until the end of February due to unfinished paperwork. The closing was supposed to happen in January. Kenitzer would not elaborate on the holdup.

The two-story building houses the US Post Office, the Nome Court facilities and field offices for federal agencies such as the U.S. Bureau of Land Management, U.S. Border and Customs as well as offices of the local chiropractor and the Nome Kennel Club.

NWTF warns Alaska to develop strategy

riches. Non-Arctic countries such as China and Korea are busy building icebreakers for their countries.

Joule highlighted the recent winter fuel delivery of the US Coast Guard cutter Healy and the Russian tanker Renda. "That was a peek into the future," Joule said. This added weight to the task force's resolution calling for the construction of U.S. icebreakers to be forwarded to the U.S. Congress.

Again calling on the recent Nome fuel delivery and the challenges it had to cut through red tape in order to load fuel from a US port onto a foreign-flagged tanker, Joule said that the task force recommends the Legislature urge the Alaska Delegation and congress to sign the Law of the Sea Treaty.

This report says "No way, we're going to take a back seat," said Joule. Climate change has captured the attention of many people around the world, he said, and Alaska allows the USA to have a seat at the table. "It's here. The increased marine traffic, it's occurring already. How are we going to play in this arena? Alaska has an opportunity to come to the forefront and to stake our claim," Joule said.

The report, he adds, is meant to be a blue print or a launching pad for the Alaska Arctic Commission to formulate a long-term strategy.

Nome Mayor Denise Michels also was a member of the Northern Waters Task Force and commented that at the local level, Nome is engaging with agencies and industry to stay informed. "It's going to directly impact our life," Michels said. "So we continue to be fully engaged."

The number one recommendation of the task force is to urge state, federal governments and industry to provide Alaskans with meaningful opportunities to participate in the Arctic policy development and outer continental shelf development decisions. And small communities like Nome or Norton Sound and Bering Strait communities are running the risk to be overlooked by agencies or industry.

For example, NOAA holds public meetings in North Slope communities and Anchorage regarding a permit for oil and gas exploration and incidental take of marine mammals. Nome and Bering Strait villages won't be consulted. The EPA is collecting public input on an air permit for oil and gas development in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas, advertising their Barrow and Anchorage meetings in the Anchorage Daily News, the Petroleum News and the Arctic Sounder. Again, no meeting slated for Nome. The choice of advertising the meeting in the Petroleum News is openly biased to invite pro-development testimony. However, Nome, Norton Sound and the Bering Strait villages are left out.

Statoil, a Norwegian oil company, conducted a meeting in Nome on their research results in the northern waters. They advertised the meeting via a flyer posted at City Hall one day prior to the meeting, no notices on the radio or in the paper regarding their meeting that boasted door prizes and provided food. These examples drive home the point that much needs to be done if Alaska wants to be in the driver's seat. Without an informed public, especially the public where the greatest impact and change is to occur, changes are not going to be embraced by the locals. "The task force believes that consistent, structured communication and consultation – particularly with Alaskans likely to be most impacted by evolving conditions – is the best way to build consensus, advance responsible policies and stimulate broadly beneficial economic development," the report says.

On Monday, the Senate Finance Committee introduced a concurrent resolution to create an Alaska Arctic Policy Commission. The commission would be made up of 16 members and charged with developing an Arctic Policy. They'd also be required to make recommendations to the Legislature by January 30, 2015.

contributed $20,000 from discretionary funds to the race. The Norton Sound 450 is an extension of the Portage 200 race from Unalakleet to Kaltag and back, she added.

During discussion of a motion by Don Stiles of Nome to contribute an additional $50,000 to the new race, board chairman Dan Harrelson of White Mountain said the race will be good for villages and will put some of them on the map.

Unalakleet board member William (Middy) Johnson said the funding request to NSEDC for the inaugural race would not be a recurring thing, there is a lot of interest in next year's race, and a web page will be established to collect donations to make future Norton Sound 450 races self-sustaining. He predicted the Norton Sound 450 could easily become one of the top three sled dog races in the state.

Eugene Asicksik, Shaktoolik's representative, said NSEDC has not provided funding support for races in the past and doesn't fund individual mushers. He said the company's support for the Norton Sound 450 will open the door to funding requests for events such as the Nome-Golovin Snow Machine Race and the Iditarod, but the memorial race will be good for the region and could not have [been named for] a better person. He noted that the Bering Straits Native Corp. has agreed to match up to $20,000 in contributions to the race, and Shaktoolik has spent $2,000 to clean up the armory for sled dog parking and to stake a local segment of the race

The board voted 13-0 to contribute an additional $50,000 to the Norton Sound 450. Middy Johnson abstained from the vote, and Joel James of Gambell was absent.

In a brief phone interview with the Nugget, Johnson said he does not intend to race in this year's Norton Sound 450 because he is too busy organizing it. It's important to organize the inaugural race so it will be a quality annual event for years, he added. (A story about the Norton Sound 450 by Diana Haecker appears in this edition.)

Outside Entity Funding

The board quickly approved a variety of community projects for 2012 outside entity funding based on recommendations from local committees that reviewed project applications. Community Benefits Director Paul Ivanoff said the company allocated $647,000 for community-based projects and $100,000 for regional entity funding this year. Rhodes told the Nugget he will issue a press release describing funding allocations for community-based projects.

Several board members spoke in favor of a regional proposal from the Nome Volunteer Fire Department for $75,000 to buy firefighting equipment for use in communities of the region outside Nome. The equipment is to be stored in special, aircraft ready containers for fast deployment. The NVFD would deploy the equipment when requested by the Alaska State Troopers.

Asicksik said NVFD has tried to respond to fires in villages in the past. The proposal notes that 14 Nome firefighters helped battle a blaze for 10 hours in Hooper Bay several years ago.

"That [proposal] caught my eye as being truly an original," said Harrelson.

Joe Garnie of Teller said villages have poor firefighting equipment. Teller has a housing shortage, so the loss of one house to fire affects everyone in the community, he added.

Lucy Kitchen of Wales said a house burns in her community because there are no hoses and firefighting training is never provided.

"The Nome fire department has helped train some of our crews and always is willing, but a grant is needed to get volunteers to Nome," Harrelson said.

A proposal from the Native Village of Unalakleet seeking funds for home-based services for elders in five communities also drew board support. The requested funds would support village coordinators in Unalakleet, Shaktoolik, Koyuk, Stebbins and St. Michael. The coordinators would report to and from village tribes, provide research and assessment assistance, recruit trainees, interface with elders and provide other services.

Oscar Takak of Elim said an elder who lives in St. Michael longs to stay near home, and the proposed project offers real benefits for village elders.

Middy Johnson cited his own experience in caring for an elderly mother while trying to work. He said there must be families in the region who are stretched thin caring for elders, and a model service program for elders could be expanded throughout the region. He said the program aims to make it easier on families to help elders stay at home and get assistance in caring for them.

"Elders like to be around family and have family with them," Johnson said. "That would be the difference."

The board approved a motion by Dean Peterson of Golovin to fully fund the NVFD proposal at $75,000 and partially fund the elder care services proposal with the remaining $25,000 for regional entity projects

Harbor repair project

A request to NSEDC from the City of Nome for $193,126 to repair the anchor system at Nome's small boat harbor was approved by the board as an amendment to the 2012 budget for shoreside infrastructure. Janis Ivanoff said the proposal should have come to the board at a budget meeting last December, but it was incorrectly identified. The city installed the anchor system in 2008 as use of the harbor greatly increased and then found that the system was easily moved around by ice, she added.

Harrelson said the city has spent $91,000 on the anchor system so far, and will use that amount as a match for funds NSEDC allocates to the repair project.

Upcoming meetings

Janis Ivanoff said the North Pacific Fishery Management Council is scheduled to issue a revised environmental assessment of alternatives for managing chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery on March 5 and to discuss the study at a council meeting March 26 to April 4 in Anchorage. She said a board workshop will be scheduled between March 5 and March 26 to discuss chum salmon bycatch issues.

Ivanoff said funds have been budgeted for all board members to attend the council meeting and the 20th anniversary celebration of the Western Alaska Community Development Program March 29-31 in Anchorage. NSEDC represents 15 Bering Strait communities in the CDQ program.

Ivanoff said each CDQ entity has been asked to nominate two persons for recognition during the CDQ anniversary event. Harrelson said he will bring forward the names of Victor Joe of St. Michael, who has served on the board since year one, and Jerry Ivanoff, NSEDC corporate secretary and Education, Employment and Training Coordinator, who is the company's longest serving employee.

The board met for a workshop on NSEDC's Bulk Fuel Loan Program

Feb. 1 in Nome. The meeting was closed to the public.

Weatherization grant deadline looms

By Diana Haecker

Record-breaking cold temperatures in Nome and high fuel prices are driving home the point that an energy efficient home in the arctic is not a bad idea. In order to help out low to median income families to beef up their home's R value in Nome, a weatherization program administered by RurALCAP and put in action by the contractor, the carpentry division of the Nome Eskimo Community, offers funding to do so. The deadline to apply for the 2012 summer construction season is Friday, February 10.

Glen Pardy, housing director with NEC, said that eligibility is determined by income limits set by Housing and Urban Development and the Native American Housing grant program. One does not have to be a tribal member or Nome Eskimo Community member to qualify. The program is serving low to median income families in the Nome area, not the Norton Sound or Bering Strait villages.

Pardy said that the income limits for a one-person household is $40,050; for a four-person household $57,200 and for an eight-person household $75,550. Work is limited to increasing the energy efficiency of a home, so no other home improvements qualify for the grant.

Pardy said that on average, a budget of $25,000 to $30,000 is available per house, but some homes require less money to fix their energy problems and the "savings" can then be used to fix up a house that needs more funds than $30,000.

He said that in the 2009 season, the program weatherized 15 homes, in 2010, 14 homes and in 2011 NEC worked on 20 homes.

So far, he has received 20 project applications. NEC takes the applications and helps applicants to review the paperwork and to make sure that all is correctly filled out.

Fire destroys house in Gambell

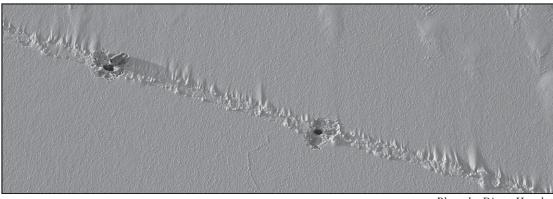

By Diana Haecker

A malfunctioning Toyo stove caused a house fire on Saturday, January 28 in Gambell. The blaze completely destroyed the home of Susie and Orlin Booshu and their four children, ages 15, 10, 6 and 2 years old. Nobody was injured as the Booshus and their two younger children were able to escape the flames. The older children were not in the house that morning, Susie Booshu Booshu said that their Toyo Laser heater had repeatedly caused trouble in the past. On Saturday morning, the heater exploded and burst a hole in the fuel pipe. Fuel leaked out and caught on fire. "The fire spread to the wall so quick and then the whole house was on fire," described Booshu. The family left the house and then called the police and fire department. When the volunteer fire fighters arrived on scene, the house was already engulfed in flames.

Booshu said the community was generous with donations of clothes. The Booshus are staying with grandparents, for now. The Bering Strait Regional Housing Authority has expedited the Booshu's application for a new home and they are now on top of the list to move into a newly renovated home. Paul Whipple, vicepresident of BSRHA said that only minor work has yet to be done on the home before the Booshus can move

Landing gear breaks off, puts BSSD plane out of commission

By Diana Haecker

Nobody was injured in a plane mishap that involved the Bering Strait School District's Cessna 406 when it was transporting the Shishmaref girls basketball team back home on Saturday, January 28. After landing in Shishmaref, the plane taxied on the runway at 40 mph when the left landing gear wheel broke off and the plane tilted to the side, according to BSSD business manager Mark Wink. The prop struck the runway, but the plane came to a stop and the girls and the pilot were able to get off unharmed. The plane was supposed to get the Gambell boys basketball team back home from Shishmaref, but they had to stay one more night in Shishmaref before they could return home on a commercial flight the next day.

Parts for the plane were shipped to Shishmaref the next day and after repairs on scene, the plane was flown to Anchorage for inspection, repairs and maintenance. Wink said that due to the prop strike, the gear box was impacted and it had to be taken out of the plane, sent to a the lower 48 to determine the damage and to get it fixed. In the meantime, with basketball season still in full swing, BSSD has to make do without their plane to shuttle athletes around the region. "We'll use commercial air carriers and of course that way we're not as flexible," said Wink. But he added, BSSD will make do without the plane for now and await the verdict on the yet to be determined damage to the plane and when it will be back in action again.

Alaska Redistricting Board appeals court decision

The Alaska Redistricting Board voted to appeal Judge McConahy's decision in 2011 Redistricting Cases vs. Alaska Redistricting Board to the Alaska Supreme Court.

In a ruling handed down on Friday, McConahy remanded four House districts back to the redistricting board.

The board's appeal to the Alaska Supreme Court will focus on two of those districts, House Districts 38 and 37.

"With respect to House Districts 38 and 37, we believe that the Superior Court's conclusions are based on significant factual and legal errors," said board chairman John Torgerson. "We are also concerned that the impact of this decision would lead to violations of the Alaska Constitution and would dilute Alaska Native voting strength statewide."

McConahy ruled that House Districts 38 isn't in line with the state Constitution as far as socioeconomics go. The district as proposed stretches from the Y-K Delta on the Bering Sea to Fairbanks. The board decided not to appeal Judge McConahy's remand of House Districts 1 and 2.

"We believe that the fix to House Districts 1 and 2 will be relatively straightforward," said Torgerson. "We will address those issues after the Supreme Court has made its ruling next month"

It is anticipated that the Alaska Supreme Court will hear oral arguments in mid-March.

CVRF donates to UAF pollock conservation coop

The Coastal Villages Region Fund, an Anchorage-based Community Development Quota group, is the newest member of the Pollock Conservation Cooperative, one of the largest private contributors to the University of Alaska.

The group contributed $150,000 to the University of Alaska Fairbanks School of Fisheries and Ocean Sciences in December.

The cooperative has donated more than $11.7 million to the school, funding the Pollock Conservation Cooperative Research Center, the Ted Stevens Distinguished Professorship of Marine Policy and the preservation of Ted Stevens' papers at UAF's Rasmuson Library.

The research center was founded in 2000 and receives approximately $1 million annually from the pollock fleet for marine research and education. It funds scientists studying North Pacific marine and coastal ecosystem issues, fisheries and marine mammals. Projects often involve graduate students working on their thesis research under the supervision of project leaders.

"The Pollock Conservation Cooperative has enabled our students and faculty to study important industry issues that would not have been possible otherwise," said the school's dean Michael Castellini. "Investing in higher education to study the health of the North Pacific and Bering Sea ecosystems promotes sustainability."

Other Pollock Conservation Cooperative members include American Seafoods, Arctic Storm, Glacier Fish Company, Coastal Villages Region Fund, Starbound and Trident Seafoods Corporation.

Nanook Boys continue rolling in Kotzebue

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Nanooks boys basketball team continued doing what they have done all season except once, which is winning basketball games. The Nanooks were able to add another two victories to their strong season by sweeping Kotzebue this past weekend. The Nanooks not only won both games, but did it in decisive matter, defeating Kotzebue by double digits in both games.

In the first game, the Nanooks were able to take over to begin the second half, eventually defeating the Huskies, 54-40. In the third quarter, Nome outscored Kotzebue 17-3 to all but put the game out of the reach by the fourth quarter. Nathan Blandford, as he has done for much of this season, led the scoring for the Nanooks with a game high 26 points. Tyler Eide added 15 points with all his points coming on three point field goals in the first half.

In the second game, it was more of the same as the Nanooks were able to defeat the Huskies in a rout, 66-32. This game did not take long to decide the winner as Nome jumped out to a commanding 21-5 first quarter lead. Blandford again led the scoring for the Nanooks with a game high 21 points. Cass Mattheis added 11 points in one of his better games of the year off the bench. Eide contributed 10 points as well, giving Nome three players in double figures.

Peter Jones was able to get 19 points for Kotzebue, but no other teammate got more than 8 points to give the Huskies the second scoring threat they much needed.

threat they much needed.

With the play of Blandford over the weekend, the senior is making a strong case for himself to not only be one of the region's top players of the year, but also perhaps a state star. But again, the story of this weekend was what has defined the Nanooks for most of this season; great defense. Head Coach Pat Callahan continues to do tremendous work with this team preparing them and making them work hard on every possession, and the results are not lying. To put it in some perspective, Nome got 66 points in the second game alone, while their defense only gave up 72 points combined in both games against the Huskies.

As regionals and the state tournament loom closer each week, the questions need to start being asked. Is this the best team in the region? Or for that matter are they a state title contending team? With the combination of the great scorers they possess and their strong defense, it sets up that they could be as good as anyone they play.

Lady Lynx Tournament brings stiff competition for Lady Nanooks

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Lady Nanooks got their fair share of basketball action this past weekend as they played four straight days in Anchorage for the Lady Lynx Tournament. There, the ladies did what they have done all season, which is play well in some games and lackluster in others, as they were able to take two of the four games played.

In the first day of action, the ladies got faced with a very tough draw as they had to take on the host team of the tournament, Dimond, a 4A school, where the Nanooks posed little threat, falling 74-39. Dimond, which is a much larger school than Nome, took the game right from the opening tip as the Nanooks did not have either the talent or depth that Dimond had.

With that loss, they were forced into the consolation bracket where they first played against Kenai. This was the game of the weekend for the Lady Nanooks as it came down to the final seconds where Nome was able to win a 48-46 thriller. The Lady Nanooks once again showed a lot of resiliency as they have all season after a loss. Down 15-2 to start the game and 7 points at halftime, the ladies came out with an 18-7 win in the third quarter to grab the lead entering the 4th quarter. Then, with 6 seconds left and the game tied, Nome did an inbounds play where Devynn Johnson, who had 17 points to lead the ladies, put up a layup with only 2 seconds remaining to give Nome the winning basket. Dylan Johnson also added 13 points to help the ladies capture their first win of the weekend.

The next game for Nome was not quite as drama-filled, as they were able to defeat 2A school Lumen Christi 49-18. It was a much-needed easy win for the Nanooks as they played two hard games the days before.

This set up the ladies to the championship game of the consolation bracket against another 4A school,, this time being West Anchorage. In what was a close game throughout,, West Anchorage was able to capture the victory over Nome, 56-49. Devynn Johnson did her part again for the Lady Nanooks scoring a game high 24 points and adding 9 rebounds. However, the story was the lack of help the ladies gave her as no other player scored in double figures. If nothing else the Lady Lyny

If nothing else, the Lady Lynx Tournament was a great thing for the Lady Nanooks to gain some experience of strong competition and to see where they stack up with a lot of other teams. The ladies continue to show signs of good things, but the question remains if they can make a deep tournament run with the inconsistencies also shown this season by them. With only a few weeks until tournament season, the ladies hope that they can fix some things and play well until that time.

Paul Johnson Memorial 450 sled dog race is underway

By Diana Haecker

Unalakleet's Norton Sound Sled Dog Club has created a new 450mile mid-distance race that is underway as of Wednesday, 10 a.m. As of press time on Tuesday, 11 mushers had signed up for the sled dog race that takes the dog teams from Unalakleet to Kaltag, back to Unalakleet and then along the Iditarod Trail to the finish line in Signed up are Louis Ambrose of St. Michael, Aaron Burmeister, his kennel partner Scott Smith, DeeDee Jonrowe and her handler Jamie Kinzer driving Jonrowe's second team, John Schandelmeier, Bethel's Pete Kaiser, Aniak's Richie Diehl, Michelle Phillips, Judie Currier and Gerald Sousa.

The prize purse boasts $50,000, pays out to 15th place with the winner taking home $11,000. The race has a total of 24 hours of mandatory rest, with eight hours to be taken in White Mountain. Twelve dogs are allowed at the race start and mushers must finish the race with seven dogs in harness. Every village along the way serves as a check point, where food drops were taken and straw is available.

Race organizer Middy Johnson said that the Norton Sound Sled Dog club had been talking about this race for a long time, until organizing started in earnest last December. The club managed to bring a slew of sponsors on board, including the Cities of Unalakleet, Kaltag, Shaktoolik, Koyuk, Elim, Golovin, White Mountain and Nome; Bering Straits Native Corporation, NSEDC and its subsidiary Siu Alaska Corp., Ryan Air, Era Aviation, Prowest Contractors and the Nome Kennel Club. ProWest contractors put out a special prize of $1,500 for the best Bering Strait/Norton musher. So far, signed up from the region are Louis Ambrose of St. Michael and Aaron Burmeister of Nome and Nenana

The Portage 200 race is taking place at the same time.

The first mushers to arrive in Nome are expected on Saturday.

Rachel Anne Okbaok

Longtime Anchorage resident, Mrs. Rachel Anne Okbaok, 67, died Saturday, Jan. 14, 2012 from lung cancer at the Home Sweet Home Assisted Living Home in Anchor-

Funeral services were Friday, January 20, Anchorage. Graveside services will be held in the spring and Rachel will be laid to rest at the Seward City Cemetery in Seward.

Rachel was born November 21, 1944 to Carl and Lucy (Weakok) Ibionna in Nome. She attended school until the 8th grade. Rachel was a beloved homemaker and a member of the Central Lutheran Church in Anchorage.

She enjoyed visiting friends and relatives, playing bingo and spending time with her best friend and husband, Elmer. Rachel did all she could to be a mother as best as she could. She was the first and only one to say and openly call her son by his nickname, "Bones," her third child, William.

Rachel was preceded in death by her loving parents, Lucy and Carl Ibionna; brother, Jonnie Ibionna; and sister, Mabel Okbaok.

She is survived by her husband, Elmer Okbaok of Anchorage; son, William Okbaok of Anchorage; daughter, Mollyanne Okbaok of Anchorage; sons, James Okbaok of Anchorage and Vernon Okbaok of Los Angeles; grandchildren, Martha Okbaok of Anchorage; Christoffer Okbaok and Kimberly Dewberry both of Los Angeles; and great-grandchildren, Cherikee Jones and Nathaniel "BooBoo" Blakeman both of Wasilla.

The family thanks all cousins, nieces, nephews and all relatives during our time of bereavement. Arrangements were cared for by the Anchorage Funeral Home.

Elliott Marl Eakon, Sr

Elliott Marl Eakon, Sr

Elliott Marl Eakon, Sr., 71, lifelong resident of Unalakleet died January 9, at the Alaska Native Medical Center in Anchorage.

Elliott was born October 14, 1940 in Unalakleet and raised by his mother Marie Eakon and uncle Harry Eakon. Elliott married Roselene Nakarak on May 2, 1971, in Unalakleet. They were together until she died in 1999. Together they raised four children: Elizabeth, Olga, Vincent and Elliott, Jr.

He was an Alaska National Guardsman for 10 years and was Honorably Discharged in March 1969. During the time he served in the National Guard, his fellow guardsmen noted him as the top shooter for Unalakleet. One of his duties as a National Guardsman was to be the "Radio Man" since he knew the Inupiat language and could communicate commands to his fellow

In the 1980s he worked for the Alaska Commercial Company in the hardware department. Although he only attended school up to the 6th grade at the Unalakleet Day School, he was an excellent carpenter, trapper, commercial and subsistence fisherman. He loved camping, hunting, fishing and enjoyed his Eskimo food. He especially loved homemade bread and cinnamon rolls with his coffee. One of his favorite places was at Sauyaq where he mended his nets, berrypicked, and camped. During the Eskimo games in Unalakleet he was a tough competitor and no one could beat him because of his huge arms, we believe his chopping wood paid off. One of his many talents was playing the guitar.

Napoleon John Bergamaschi

Napoleon John Bergamaschi was born to James and Mary Bergamaschi, joining sister Cheryl and brothers Raymond and James, Jr. Later came more sisters Esther and Dorothy, and Laura, and little brother Charlie. Napoleon moved to the Jesse Lee Home in Seward in 1960 and later moved with the Jesse Lee Home to Anchorage. He graduated from East High School in 1970. He enrolled in Job Corp and traveled from 1970 to 1973

Napoleon worked for Alaska Children's Services with the Jesse Lee Home from 1974 to 1977. It was during this time that he met and married Donna on November 30, 1976. Their daughter Cynthia Fawnette, was born on June 6, 1977. Napoleon, Donna, and Cynthia moved to Nome shortly after she came into the world.

Napoleon worked for the Nome Community Center Teen Center and then worked as a mechanic several places before moving back to Anchorage in the early 1980s. No matter where Napoleon was, he was an outdoorsman who loved fishing, camping, and just being outside. He would take his nephews to zoos, travel to Seward and Kenai for fishing trips, camping, and four-wheeling in the summer and winter. He used to go fishing and crabbing with his friend Robin Thomas. When he wanted someone in which to confide, he spent time with Cootus Warnke. Most recently he worked for the Norton Sound Seafood Cen-

Napoleon was a very friendly person and could see no bad in anyone. When asked about his view he said that everyone's human with a good soul. The last time he moved to Nome, he had divorced Donna. When he came to Nome, he lived at West Beach. He constantly took people in and visited with his siblings when he thought of them. Napoleon was very proud of his nieces and nephews Shawn R., Terrance R., Loren O., Michael R., January R., Joseph A., Mary L., Ada, Shawn E., Shane, Chipper, Asa, Melody, Raymond J., Teddy, and

Give your Valentine heart healthy chocolate

LASKA

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

If you want to express your love toward your sweetheart, you could send a card or flowers. But if you really care about your Valentine's heart and brain, go

chocolates. the Over last several years, research has shown that chocolate in moderation improves overall cardiovascular health by lowering blood pressure, reducing inflammation, moderating platelet activity and lowering harmful blood

Dark chocolate has a low glycemic index, meaning that its effect on blood sugar is lower than would be expected for a "sweet" dessert-type food. Research also suggests that chocolate has a positive insulin-like effect that helps regulate blood sugar.

Eating chocolate even appears to lower your risk of having a stroke. Studies show that people who eat at least 50 grams (about ½ chocolate bar) per week are less likely to have a stroke compared to people who do not eat choco-

Chocolate also seems to patients help who have had a heart attack. In a study published in the Journal of Internal Medicine in September of 2009, patients who ate chocolate two or more times a week had a 66 percent reduced risk of dying from a subsequent heart attack compared to patients who did not eat chocolate.

The health benefits of chocolate stem from naturally occurring compounds called flavonoids. In addition to chocolate, flavonoids are found in many plants and plant-derived foods such as blueberries, cranberries, apples, peanuts, onions, tea and red wine. There are more than 4,000 different flavonoid compounds. The active compound in chocolate appears to be a powerful flavonoid called epicatechin that has insulin-mimicking effects, reduces vessel-damaging inflammation, and promotes heart health.

According to a study published in the journal Circulation in 2007, the heart-protective benefits of the flavonoids in dark chocolate appear within two hours of consumption.

Not all chocolate has the same Cocoa is the healthy benefit. flavonoid-rich ingredient in choco-Therefore dark chocolate, which has a higher cocoa concentration, is considered more beneficial than milk chocolate, which has a higher proportion of sugar and saturated fats. Furthermore, dark chocolate is processed in a way that preserves up to 95 percent of the flavonoid content.

Call for Nominations: Salmon users

The ADF&G-recognized Regional Aquaculture Association representing Norton Sound/Bering Strait salmon users is seeking nominations for seats representing the following categories: 1) Commercial salmon permit holders; 2) Sport fishermen; 3) Subsistence users.

Necessary qualifications: To represent any one of the three categories on the RAA, a nominee must maintain a permanent domicile and mailing address, and be eligible to receive an Alaska Permanent Fund dividend, in one of the following communities: Brevig Mission, Diomede, Elim, Gambell, Golovin, Koyuk, Nome, St. Michael, Savoonga, Shaktoolik, Stebbins, Teller, Unalakleet, Wales or White Mountain. To represent regional commercial salmon permit holders, a nominee must hold a valid Norton Sound/Port Clarence salmon permit (S04Z). To represent regional sport fishermen, a nominee must be eligible to sport fish for salmon and hold a license number. To represent regional subsistence fishermen, a nominee must be eligible to subsistence fish for salmon.

How to nominate: Petitions are available at www.nsedc.com, from NSEDC offices in Nome and Unalakleet, or from NSEDC community liaisons. Nomination petitions need to have 10 signatures from residents who also meet the requirements for the seat being sought by the nominee (i.e. a petitioner seeking to represent commercial permit holders needs to have signatures from 10 fellow permit holders).

Where to send petitions: Completed petitions must be received by RAA Director Charlie Lean by 5 p.m. on February 29, 2012. Petitions should be sent to Mr. Lean at the following address:

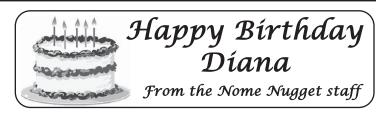

Charlie Lean, RAA Director PO Box 358 Nome, AK 99762

Fax: (907) 443-2478 Phone: (888) 650-2477

How representatives are selected: The members of the RAA board will vote on nominations for the sport and subsistence salmon users' seats. Commercial permit holders will vote for their nominee. The top votegetters will be seated with the runners-up named as alternates.

About RAAs: Regional Aquaculture Associations (RAAs) are intended to bring salmon fishery stakeholders to a common regional forum to discuss issues regarding salmon enhancement and human needs. One of the RAA's main responsibilities is to choose representatives to the Regional Planning Team, the body that writes the Comprehensive Salmon Plans and advises the commissioner of Fish and Game on salmon hatcheries and local needs.

The ADF&G-recognized RAA representing the Norton Sound/Bering Strait region is currently contacting all seat-holders to nominate and elect representatives to the RAA. These representatives, in addition to the salmon users mentioned above, are: Island District (Gambell and Savoonga); Bering Strait District (Diomede, Wales, Brevig Mission, Teller); Nome District (City of Nome, King Island Native Community, Nome Eskimo Community, Solomon IRA, Council IRA); Northeast Norton Sound District (White Mountain, Golovin, Elim, Koyuk); Eastern Norton Sound District (Shaktoolik and Unalakleet); Southern Norton Sound District (St. Michael, Stebbins); Kawerak; NSEDC; and processors with shoreside offices in the region (NSEDC).

Nome Eskimo Community is awarded Federal funding to fulfill our mission of providing safe. affordable and decent housing in Nome. Each year, NEC reports to U.S. Housing & Urban Development on the progress made with these Federal funds during the previous year. The Annual Performance Report for 2011 is available for public review and comment at the NEC offices located at 200 West 5th Avenue, during normal business hours, Monday through Friday until Friday, 17 February 2012.

How cold does it get in Alaska?

One winter, when I was young in Alaska, I was at Barrow and it got so cold the city's electric generators broke. Barrow had diesel generators, back then. They have since converted to natural gas, and don't have this problem anymore. The cold weather made the diesel fuel so jellylike and sluggish that it broke the main fuel pump. In Barrow, when it gets this cold, the wind stops. There is no snow. The weather seems as frozen solid as the ground and ocean ice it hovers over. Ice crystals just hung in the air. As Barrow is so far north— this was during their long, winter night. Every year this is the place where the sun doesn't shine for almost three months.

The loss of power was unfortunate, but electricity was fairly new to Barrow, back then. The residents still had many of the old ways to survive. The biggest concern was that planes couldn't land at the airport because it was so dark, all the time.

to light up the runways. Without the airplanes, they couldn't bring in a fuel pump replacement or even the parts to repair the old one. Everyone was settling in for a long, hard win-

We would have lasted just fine like this, except for a few ladies who were pregnant. Their husbands, and many others, worried about their pregnancies, and especially what would happen if these wives had complications before or during the births. These guys would not accept the fact that airplanes could not land in Barrow for almost two months. They went all over town looking for a way to get airplanes into Barrow for emergencies.

The village elders heard their pleas, but it wasn't until they knew it was getting even colder, that they announced their plan. They told everyone to bring all the spare paper and drift wood they had down to the air-

At the airport, they collected hundreds of 55-gallon drums with their tops cut out. Thanks to the military presence in Alaska, these drums are not hard to find. In fact, it is still said that anywhere you go in Alaska, you are never more than 30 minutes away from a discarded 55-gallon drum. These drums are called "Tundra Flowers" in the bush because they appear in the most desolate places with such regularity. It's like our military just dropped the drums out of their airplanes whenever they were empty. Villages and cities are inundated with these containers, as

The elders had us fill the 55-gallon drums with paper and driftwood. Then, we lined the runway on both sides with the filled drums. With this done, the elders told everyone to wait for the really cold weather to come

Three days later, the elders called us all together and said the weather was right. They instructed Barrow airport to call Fairbanks and send a plane with the pump parts. The elders guaranteed the runway would be lit by the time the plane got to Barrow. Then, the elders lit each of the 55-gallon drums on the runway. It was so cold that the flames froze as soon as they jumped up beyond the rims of the drums, and were exposed to the outside air above. The eerie. frozen, fires made perfect landing lights for the airport. And they stayed that way for a couple of weeks, long after the airplane arrived and the fuel pump was replaced.

Matter of fact, the frosted flames became a nuisance after a while. Frozen fire fascinated school kids. Youngsters kept chipping off pieces of the flames to take with them. It wasn't much of a problem, as long as the kids kept the frozen flames outside and held them with their mittens. After that, however, they would put the pieces in their pockets, and forget about them. The flames would thaw out and burn their jackets, and the kids, before they got

Eventually, the 55-gallon frozenflame beacons had to be destroyed. One enterprising young child sneaked a flame chip home and tried to use it to read under the covers of his bed. The ensuing flames burnt down his whole house. The tragedy scared the whole town. It was decided that there was just no way to keep the kids away from the 'hot

I have never seen frozen fire since. I'm not sure it will ever get that cold, again and I'll never know what the elders did that was so special with those drums. We haven't needed the frosted flames as much as we did that time. Modern technology may make some magic unnecessary.

My faith would still be with the elders, if we had a problem like this again. I'm sure they would still be ready if the need arose.

Russian crew gets pizza party sendoff

By Sandra L. MedearisThe Russian-flagged oil tanker Renda was wending its way along the east side of the Kuril Islands north of Japan's Hokkaido Island Monday, continuing its voyage home to Vladivostok.

Last month the tanker brought 1.4 million gallons of gasoline and ultra low sulfur diesel fuel through the ice to Nome with the help of the USCG icebreaker Healy.

The fuel, collected from South Korea and Alaska's Dutch Harbor, came to replace a barge load of fuel that did not arrive before ice closed off summer season deliveries to the town of 3,400.

The Renda likely would pull into homeport Thursday, according to Stacey Smith, spokeswoman for Vitus Marine, the Alaska company that chartered the Renda for the unusual winter delivery.

"I do not know if there is any sort of homecoming celebration planned in the Russian port," Smith said. "However, we will certainly make a toast here in Anchorage to her safe return. The mission was not officially complete to us until the vessel returned home safely."

The 22-person crew of the Renda did get a warm send-off shortly before they left Nome.

"I got the idea to make them a pizza party to show our appreciation," said Andrea Surina who works at the Polar Café where many of the Coast Guard collected to eat during the week of the fuel transfer. "I sent it out on a snowmachine and a sled.

"Here we are, in our houses warm and comfortable, food on our tables, home for the holidays. They were willing to do this, leave their families over the holidays and make this trip," Surina said. "We appreciate the idea that we have the fuel now so we won't run out."

Surina had to work for two days through rules and regulations, battling with U.S. Customs issues, safety and security. She finally obtained permission through a call to the governor's office, she said.

Then she rounded up blueberry pie and apple pie, two flavors of ice ream—chocolate and vanilla bean.

That took care of dessert. For a main course, she asked Bill Howell at Airport Pizza to make four big piz-

"Then we got them two cases of Alaskan Amber beer," Surina said. Howell said he had no problem donating four huge "everything-on -'em "chef's mistake" pizzas.

We made them some pizza because it was the right thing to do," Howell said. "They helped us out. They had a mission. They accomplished their mission. It is good to say thanks. It is better to say it with

Smith took the pizza across the ice in the subzero night, riding in a sled behind a snowmachine.

"The crew was extremely grateful, and said they've never been treated as well as they were in Nome!,' Smith reported in an e-mail.

"When the snowmachine got to the Renda, the ship blinked its lights," Surina said. "We were driving my honey's pickup. We thought they were saying thank you, so we blinked our truck lights back.

The Healy crunched up the ice around the Renda, freeing her, and the two ships slipped through the misty ice fog Saturday morning, Jan. 21. After they battled through about 400 miles of iced-over sea, the pair cleared the ice and went their separate ways. The Healy continued south to Seattle for scheduled maintenance. The Renda is currently headed for its home base of its owner, RIMSCO, a Russian marine survey and appraisal company that owns more than 50 assorted working

To get to Nome to deliver the fuel, the ships had to break through about 300 miles of ice. At times, the Healy had to cut a circle around the ship a second time when refreezing ice and ice chunks separated the two Vitus Marine sought and won a special waiver of the 1920 Jones Act to allow the Renda to pick up gasoline at Dutch Harbor and bring it to another American port. The Jones Act is a part of the Merchant Marine Act that requires a ship delivering goods between American ports to be built in the United States operated by American crews.

All in all, the Healy escorted the Renda through a round trip of about 800 miles of ice-covered Bering Sea.

The Bering Sea gold rush is on its way

Is Nome ready for those who have been bitten by the gold bug?

By Diana Haecker

Just after the premiere of the Discovery Channel's "Bering Sea Gold" TV reality show starring Nome gold dredge miners aired on January 27, Nome's city offices and other businesses and organizations have been inundated with phone calls that inquired: What permits do we need to dredge for gold up there? Is there a mining camp? Can I buy a dredge up there? Can just anybody go and mine the beaches of Nome?

The city, the office of the harbormaster, the Nome Visitor and Convention Center, the Nome Nugget newspaper and land owners like Bering Straits Native Corporation and Nome Gold Alaska Corp. have been receiving inquiries as to what it takes to come up to Nome and rake Friday evening shows. "That kind of in the gold.

City manager Josie Bahnke said that the volume of calls from Lower 48 prospectors have been overwhelming. Kerwin Krause with the Alaska Department of Natural Resources said that DNR offices have received a call every five minutes. especially on Mondays following the call volume is not normal. So far we received about 300 phone calls," Krause said on Monday. He said that he warns newcomers to mining in the north that it is not as easy as it looks on TV. "We're telling people that there are no leases available now," Krause said. Recreational miners can work on West Beach, but they have to be standing in water up to their knees and they can use small dredges with suction hoses less than six inches in diameter and rocker sluice boxes, Krause said. The recreational mining area extends on West Beach from the west end of the port's causeway to two miles west. But other than that, sorry, offshore leases have been sold and are no

The Alaska DNR is still finalizing the bids as a few high bidders, who "won" leases in an outcry auction last September, have not come through with their payments. "But those leases probably won't go up for lease any time soon," Krause said. There has also been a dispute over paperwork that wasn't filed in time for the auction that nearly disqualified two high bidders. An appeal is still pending, which awaits a decision by the DNR commissioner in the next months.

Krause said that he's been in communication with Nome city officials as to what is needed to prepare for

USCG updates mayor on summer marine traffic

By Diana Haecker

During a meeting last week in Juneau, Nome Mayor Denise Michels along with Dutch Harbor Mayor Marquart received an update from U.S. Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo regarding increased shipping traffic heading to northwest Alaska this summer. While all permits have not been issued, oil giant Shell is getting ready to commence exploration drilling in the Beaufort Sea and Arctic Ocean this summer.

Michels said in an email to The Nome Nugget that Shell plans to have a flotilla with 22 vessels, three fixed wing aircraft, three helicopters and more than 400 personnel heading to the drill sites. There would be more than 300 passenger transfers per week to the drilling rigs Discoverer and the Kulluk.

While Barrow would be the community closest to the drill sites, the USCG plans to use the community for Arctic Shield Operations, and deploy the cutter Alex Haley plus a buoy tender to the Arctic Ocean. The Coast Guard would use the Nome port to re-supply. Michels also said that there is a concern that protestors objecting to OCS drilling would show up and the USCG is coordinating with the Alaska Department of Public Safety to be ready for all eventualities.

If Shell succeeds to get all necessary permits, it would be the first company in 2012 to begin work. Every year, there could be an increase in exploration activities, and

Council gets through agenda without sleeping bags

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council waded through 284 pages of business in a surprisingly short timeless than two hours-Monday evening, Feb. 13.

The bulk of debate covered adjustments to budget amendments going through a fine-toothed comb. For the most part, the changes stemmed from mid-fiscal year adjustments to bring revenues or expenses either closer to actual at Jan. 17 or closer to projections.

The Council adopted all the budget ordinances coming up for second reading at the meeting. There was considerable discussion concerning the funding of a community service officer and a car for the person to drive that was suitable for transporting inebriates safely and preventing injury to the CSO. Covering this expense and other needs of the police department would require reallocation and supplemental funding. The Council unanimously approved an amendment for $40,000 to go with $25,000 provided by Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. "If we want Chief Papasodora to put an officer on the street, then we should supply the proper equipment for the gentleman-or lady-to do the job," Councilman Randy Pomeranz said.

In other action, the Council:

• Voted to change the name of Bypass Road to Kruschek Road in honor of the late Greg Kruschek. Andersen urged the Council to vote the resolution Monday and then get the paperwork done without a delay until the next meeting.

• Passed into second reading and adoption at its next regular meeting an ordinance allowing the Council to compensate members of the Nome Port Commission, to codify the har-

"Terrible Blizzard of January 19th - 20th 1901"

Short Stories Written by Chas.L.Guimond "During the long evenings of the Winter 1900-01 Founded upon more truth than fiction"

Written in Nome City, Alaska From the Jim Walsh Family Collection In the Archives of the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum, Nome, Alaska

Museum Editor's Note: The darn grammar and spelling errors are still all his!
As promised, the Carrie M. McLain

Memorial Museum is pleased to present another passage from an unpublished manuscript in our archives. We know little about Chas. L. Guimond, the author of these short stories. He was born Leo Charles Guimond in Holyoke, Massachusetts on November 21, 1879. He was 21 years old when he landed on our beaches to seek his fortune in gold. Guimond wrote several entertaining stories in his journal throughout the long, cold Nome winter of 1900-1901. The Museum will publish more of Chas's musings in upcoming issues of The Nome Nugget.

For now let's go back in time 111 years ago to a time when there were no forecasts from the National Weather Service. Blizzards would rage without warning, surprising an unsuspecting musher and his dog team out on the ern part of Alaska. Several men traveling to and from adjoining districts were frozen to death and several more are known to have been lost but-not-yet-found. Men have been coming in every day with frozen hands and some with both hands and feet frozen. Caught in this terrific blizzard on the trail, among those who lost their lives were Dr. Tam a highly respected citizen of Teller City and formerly of St. Louis, Mo. and Dr. Peltin a young pioneer whose home is in Oakland, Cal. lost his life near Solomon River. Dr. Baum an honored Citizen of Council City also lost his life in this terrible storm.

"Terrible Blizzard of January 19th - 20th 1901" By Chas.L.Guimond Nome City, Alaska Fby.4th 1901

One poor unfortunate man Otis Stowe was heartlessly abandoned by his two companions. When no longer able to hold on to the handles of the sleigh he was left to lag behind and to make his way as best he could. His companions reached the road house in Safety and a party went out in search of Stowe but could not find him. His body was found on the 31st within 120 yards of the road house, in a crouching posture with both his hands upon his breast alongside of a hammock of ice. Many more are lost but these are the only names at present that I have obtained. This writer hereof in speaking of the cruel desertion of Stowe by his companions, said to a representative of a local paper that, in a man's mining country where miners rule more than they do in Nome that when a man gets so exhausted as to be unable to hold the handles of the sleigh everything is thrown away and he is allowed to ride and not left to die alone like a dog upon the inhospitable shores of the Behring Sea. In any other mining country outside of far north Alaska the miners would investigate and bring to account, those men who so cruelly deserted their comrade.

It was one of the most terrific storms ever seen in this part of the country. Men who left their houses in the evening to go downtown were unable to find them when they returned. Others found their houses so completely covered up with snow that they could not get in and had to take refuge in some saloon for the night.

They're Coming

Are we ready? They're almost on their way. We're not talking Iditarod dog teams, we're talking gold fever stampeders. Recent television shows promoting gold mining on the beaches of Nome have unleashed a vast interest in the glitter that is just laying around on our braches that Nomeites haven't been able to pick up.

We've probably all had inquiries and emails asking how one gets a job mining the beaches. There are rumors of thousands of dredges in Seattle waiting to be loaded on barges heading to Nome. Is our town ready for this? Do we have enough public toilets to accommodate this rush? Do we have facilities for lodging the crowd? Do we have enough police officers to keep order? Do we have plans to deal with the disenchanted prospector who spent his last dime to get here?

How will the onslaught of gold seekers impact our town? Our city planners and coordinators need to be aware that in a few months the gold bug will bite us and we will be overwhelmed by folks who have no idea what they are getting into. We need to be prepared. Whether we like it or not, gold fever has struck and would-be gold miners are on their way. $-{\rm N.L.M}-$

FREE HEAT! - Eddie Kakaruk and Betsy Pikonganna sign up for gift oil from CITGO. This year's assistance will provide 80 gallons of heating fuel to each household in the Norton Sound region. Carline Jack of Kawerak, Inc., left, helps applicants. Stacy Kosto looks on.

With heating fuel costs at an alltime high in the Nome area, the annually hoped-for assistance from CITGO has arrived.

This week, heads of households whether renters or homeowners applied for almost $500 worth of free fuel credit with the following heading on the single sheet application:

"From the Venezuelan hearts to the Alaskan hearths.'

With heating fuel averaging $6.23 per gallon in Nome, based on pump prices, each delivery will put 80 gallons into fuel tanks per applicant. Renters making out the applications will get credit applied to their monthly rent. Applicants with accounts at Crowley or Bonanza will have the $494 applied to their accounts; others will get a one-time delivery of fuel.

Where?

Applicants were able to sign up for the heating fuel at the Sitnasuak Building lobby Feb. 13 through Feb. 17. Beginning Tuesday, applications will be available at Kawerak Talialuk Building, first floor. Applications close on April 30 at 4 p.m.

The application states that CITGO is owned by the Venezuelan people through the PDVSA company [Petroleos de Venezuela S.A.], one of the top exporters of oil to the Citizens Energy works through CITGO to give heating assistance to cold weather states and populations where oil prices have zoomed upward and incomes have stagnated.

According the Citizens Energy Web site, partnership with CITGO has helped 200,000 households through 2,500 participating dealers. Nome area residents may specify their desired dealer as Bonanza Fuel or Crowley. The aid has gone to a dozen states and nine tribes in the Lower 48, all in all, around 250 Native American communities, including 20 Norton Sound-Seward Peninsula region villages.

The Citizens corporation has established health, energy and conservation programs since its beginning in 1979.

what may be a modern day gold rush. Krause said that a DNR field office person is supposed to arrive this summer to guide new miners in their endeavor and make sure that rules are obeyed.

Krauses' as well as harbor master Joy Baker's concern is the limited amount of berthing spots for small dredges. Small dredges parked in the harbor are issued permits; the smaller dredges that are tied up at the east side of Snake River for now do not require permits. Baker said in an email exchange with the Nugget that the exact number of dredges that can be accommodated has not been worked out yet because it hinges on the quantity of barge traffic arrive and the size of the permitted vessels.

City manager Josie Bahnke said that city officials are undertaking a focused effort to analyze DNR's permitting process and to see if the city needs to come up with its own permitting process to cover eventual gaps. In the absence of an Alaska Coastal Management Zoning program, the city is now faced with either drafting its own coastal use regulations to somehow regulate what can and cannot occur in city limits or to do nothing and see its resources and staff time stretched beyond the city's capabilities.

Hopeful that a DNR person will be present in Nome to help out, Bahnke said the city has offered the use of the city's search and rescue vessel the Guardian to DNR for

The new owners of the Alaska Gold Company's land that includes West Beach and the area around Dredge 6 are contemplating a solution to the housing crunch, a problem that haunts Nome every summer. Last summer Alaska Gold allowed miners to set up camp on the beach, although there were no restroom facilities. Now, Nome Gold Alaska Corporations business manager Mitch Erickson said that he envisions to set up an "industrial" campground near Dredge 6 with access to West Beach, where miners can pitch their tents, place their containers, park their four-wheelers and dredges and repair their equipment 24/7 without having to worry about noise restrictions. He also said it would provide Porta-potties, but no access to fresh water yet. Erickson is not too worried about the onslaught of new miners, but rather welcomes it as just a different sort of tourism that is bound to bring money into the community.

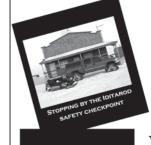

However, DNR's Kerwin Krause is worried that some miners who jump into becoming Nome dredge miners too fast may loose their money and end up not having the means to support themselves or go back home. During the rainy summer of 2011, many miners didn't get to go out on the water and do their work due to bad weather and rough ocean conditions.

Paula Davis with the Community Center did notice that miners who had camped out on West Beach were

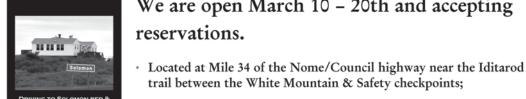

The Bering Sea gold rush is on its way to Nome looking for sleeping bags and tarps in the thrift store. Senior miners in the summer use the services of the XYZ center for lunch and the use of laundry facilities. DNR's Kerwin Krause even recommends inquiring prospectors to check out the GPAA camp at Cripple Creek for a mining experience.

Mitch Erickson recommends to newcomers to visit Nome for a few weeks and see if they like the weather, the cost of living and the work. "Before you blow your wad, come here first and see if you like it," Erickson said. "Don't come here boom or bust." Erickson also suggested that for miners who do well

New port rules: What big teeth they have

By Sandra L. Medearis

It is over and out—with boats being left in the Port of Nome waters after freeze-up. Under current tariff provisions, a boat could remain with owners-operators gaining permission and paying a fee.

Although several panel members corrected themselves hastily after making reference to the tugboat Rustler to speaking in general about abandoned derelict boats, it was clear during the latest meeting of the Nome Port Commission that a proposed ordinance related to the port tariff revision would attempt to corral miner Mike Benchoff and his water crafts.

This is just one way the Port Commission is tightening up the regulations to help port staff and port users deal with the crowd of gold miners Nome expects to host this summer.

The ordinance, passed to second reading by the Council Monday, would allow compensation for port commissioners, codify the position of harbormaster, clarify the port director commission and establish steps for impounding "delinquent, derelict and abandoned" vessels. Revisions to the port tariff raise some fees and also extend the Port of Nome jurisdiction to all navigable waters within the City of Nome limits. Commissioners have been working on a tariff revision that the Nome Common Council also has on their desks.

Benchoff's boat has loomed eternal on the south wall this winter, frozen in and immoveable by orders, letters and requests of Joy Baker, harbormaster. The new tariff language sets out procedures for impounding "delinquent, "or "abandoned and derelict vessels."

A "delinquent" vessel poses a hazard to public health, safety or convenience or whose owner creates serious disruptions in port operations:

- "Having an account over 90 days past due."
- Causing at least two hazardous materials releases—in water or on port property.
- "Causing or allowing to be caused at least two incidents of damage to port property and/or infrastructure."
- Majorly sassing the harbormaster,
 i. e., "involvement in at least two confirmed reports of altercations/disputes with other users or Port Staff [sic] that require police assistance."
- "Violating tariff rules or regulations on two or more occasions (speed, reckless mooring, improper mooring, refusing to keep work area safe, clean and accessible."
- "Refusing to comply with a direct order from Harbormaster [sic] or port and harbor staff."

A derelict vessel or abandoned vessel" is any vessel moored or otherwise located within the Nome port which is forsaken, partly submerged, deserted or whose owner fails to contact the port director within 10 days (previously seven days) after written notice declaring the vessel to be abandoned has been attached to said vessel.

The tariff requires that written notice given to the owner, a person on the vessel or by certified mail, stating a time for the owner to be heard at a pre-impoundment informal hearing, but not less than 10 days after notice is given. The hearing might result in impoundment or a list of work orders to the owner to bring the vessel into compliance. Should the owner not appear at the appointed time, the issue would be left up to the port director.

A section amendment to the tariff removes a possible conflict of interest in allowing a hearing before the City Council rather than the port director. The owner, according to the tariff, would request a hearing in writing within 30 days after the receipt or publishing of the impound notice. The hearing held, the Council would have 10 days to issue a decision or uphold the port director's decision to impound. After that, the recourse would be the state Superior Court.

The impound process has been studied by the City's attorney and followed standard maritime law, Baker said.

The "port director" is the city manager or another employee working as port director. The tariff makes optional whether the port director may be sworn as a law enforcement officer. If the port director position were vacant, the harbormaster would have the powers of port director, according to the tariff. According to the document, the harbormaster has responsibility for day-to-day operations, including enforcement of the tariff rules and regulations.

Got insurance?

Proposed tariff revision adds an insurance requirement for port users. Those with vessels with a carrying capacity of over 50 total gallons of combined petroleum products must have on file proof of liability insurance. Port users with vessels with capacity of less than 50 total gallons of combined fuel products must also provide proof of insurance, or with approval of the port director, pay an additional fee of 10 cents per foot added to fee required for the vessel's docking permit. Failure to comply would make the port user a trespasser on Port of Nome property subject to eviction, stop work order, or daily fines of $300 for each day of operation without the required certificate, even be banned from the port.

The tariff states other conditions and violations in several places in the text that could result in a port user or vessel being barred from port use for all time.

Also new in the tariff is a requirement that a vessel moored in the small boat harbor be in functional repair, a condition that the owner-operator must prove by taking the boat out half a mile from the port and back under its own power once during each 30'days' moorage.

Fees will go up slightly for bulk liquid products leaving the port, from a penny and a half per gallon to two cents per gallon. The increase based on labor costs for these small outbound deliveries, Baker said Monday by e-mail.

Vessels operating out of the inner harbor during summer months—both under 50 feet and over 50 feet, have the option to apply for a docking permit and pay 15 percent the daily rate for the season June through October, 25 percent of daily rate for a monthly permit, and 40 percent the daily rate for a weekly permit, compared to the previous rate of 20, 30 and 50 percent for larger boats and a flat rate for boats under 50 feet.

Baker and the commissioners discussed that with some port users not getting in the water until July pointed to needed flexibility in user fees. Otherwise, it "would not pencil out for them," Baker said.

Home-ported vessels dry-docked within Port of Nome will pay a flat rate of $700 for over 25 feet and $400 for under 25 feet for winter, November through May. If vessels remain idle for the summer season, that rate would be $400.

Terminal storage rates on uplands both east and west of the Snake River are slated to go up half a penny to a nickel per square foot per week.

Ships over 300 feet will pay $100 more for line handling services—$850—and for dumping unregulated refuse, $50 more or $350.

Trailer parking will cost $3.50 per foot for the ice-free season.

The revised tariff extends the Port of Nome to include all navigable waters within city limits. This and other adjustments discussed stem from the anticipation that many will come to Nome to hunt gold this summer.

Commissioner Charlie Lear feared there would be "issues with dredge and boat parking all the way up the Snake River to Bering Air."

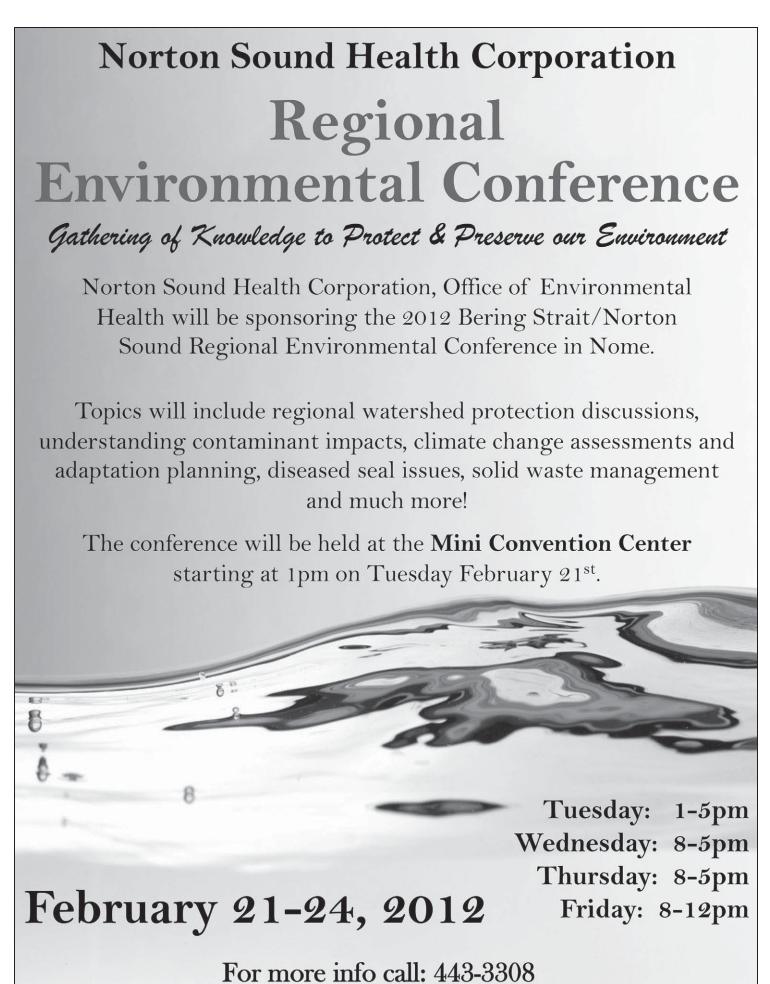

SOS! Help!

A fee schedule will be adopted for vessel assistance from the port's boat, the 28-ft. Guardian: emergency, $750 flat rate; non-emergency, $220 flat rate; plus fuel and labor at $55 per hour (one hour minimum); and 18-ft skiff, $25 per hour (one hour minimum.) Callers for the Guardian's services must state plainly that the situation is a "non-emergency" to get the lower rate, otherwise, the higher fee will automatically apply.

Finally, Commissioner Jeff Darling made a pitch for the Port Commission members to receive a stipend like other City commissions, say, like the Planning Commission.

Or, "we could take the $40 away from the Planning Commission and make it all volunteer," he said.

The ordinance at hand includes language allowing the Nome Common Council to give port commissioners a stipend.

Where should the sixth graders go?

By Diana Haecker

Nome Public Schools superintendent Mike Brawner invited the community to a meeting last week at the Nome Elementary School to lay out thoughts on how to reorganize the fifth and sixth grades to have a better student/teacher ratio, which in turn promises better academic intervention if a student is struggling. And many students seem to be struggling.

In front of a crowd of nearly 30 parents, school employees and school board members, Brawner presented sobering results gathered during an assessment of students in October.

Forty percent of fifth graders are reading at a second grade level. Thirty-eight percent of sixth graders read at a second grade level or lower. Thirty-seven percent of seventh graders read at a third grade level or lower and 51 percent of eighth graders read at third grade level or lower. Brawner pointed to research that lists several dropout indicators. "If a student reads below grade level doesn't mean they're doomed," Brawner said. "That's not what's happening, but if you struggle with reading, you struggle with math. And research shows that if you add one or two more of these indicators, dropping out is almost a guaranteed thing," Brawner said. Other dropout indicators include being over age for grade level, having poor attendance, failing either in math or English language arts and demonstrating various behavioral issues.

In order to restructure the 56er pod - currently the entire fifth and sixth grade consisting of 100 students share one pod and four teachers - Brawner presented two scenarios as a conversation-starter. The current ratio is 25 students to one teacher. In the Junior High grades 7 and 8, there are 75 students and five teachers with a ratio of 15:1. Brawner said that lower student to teacher ratio in earlier grades is very important in order to interfere academically earlier and bring strug-gling students up to speed. "The 15 to 1 ratio should be in lower grades," Brawner said. "If we have it in Jr. High, great, but we should have this in lower grade classes.'

Brawner proposes two options. Either move the sixth grade to Nome-Beltz and create a Middle School with a middle school principal, loss of the Jr./Sr. High School assistant principal position and move fifth and sixth grade personnel to the new Middle School. The second scenario would be to leave the 6th grade at Nome Elementary School and move Jr. High School personnel to the 56er pod.

"This is only where the conversation starts," stressed Brawner in his presentation. "Are there only these two things that can be done? No, there are hybrids of these options." If the sixth grade were to remain at NES under the current 56er concept, Brawner proposed to bring in a dean of students and move one staff person from Jr. High to the 56er pod. The result would bring the student/teacher ratio in the 56er pod to 17:1 while the Jr.High ratio would go up to 23:1.

And what happens when the sixth grade would move to Jr. High? The Jr./Sr. High assistant principal would become the middle school principal, one position from the 56er pod would be moved to the newly created middle school and there would be no dean of students or an assistant principal at Nome-Beltz High School anymore. Brawner took the question to those directly impacted and asked the 56ers what they wanted. "The first question was what time school would start," said Brawner. But those details as well as bus schedules have not been worked out. However, most students in the 56er pod wanted to move sixth grade to the Jr. High school at Nome-Beltz.

Parents present during last week's meeting weren't so convinced. Where would the sixth graders' classrooms be? Right there in the Jr. High area, Brawner said. What about interaction with older students and the danger of bullying? There is very little interaction between Jr. High and Senior High, high school personnel said. A parent said we need more teachers than supervisors. "We seem to get top heavy and more teachers would help students more than yet another supervisor," the parent said.

Brawner said that he also surveyed the teachers and while some had deep feelings about keeping the 56er pod concept intact, other teachers said that a well-run middle school would be the way to go. Spatial considerations came also into play as the school district projects 680 students for the next year, with 50 to 55 kindergarteners rolling in and 23 seniors graduating from school.

An online survey is posted at www.nomeschools.com Brawner said that so far 50 percent of survey takers opted to leave sixth grade at the NES, while a third said they wanted to see a middle school. Brawner said that in his personal experience, it's all about how things are structured and organized. "I moved here from a Middle School in Petersburg and they had it set up and organized to make it work. Before that, I worked at a school in Tennessee which had a 56er shared classroom, and it also worked great, because of the way it was structured," Brawner said.

The online survey is still actively taking comments. Brawner also invited community members to email their thoughts to his email address at mbrawner@nomeschools.com.

Nome Elementary's NYO athletes compete in Anchorage

By Joni Earp, NYO Coach

Athletes are defined by moments in time that they capture. Relying on hard work, determination and honed in skill, they have to transcend all they have done to earn success and their own personal best.

In a recent kicking clinic hosted by Boogles Johnson and Roy Tobuk, Johnson reminded the team to "work toward their personal best." The team took it to heart. Though young athletes have many years of experience in front of them, there are moments in their early careers one could say are landmark.

Saturday's meet was one of those landmark days. Students competed for coveted slots on the Nome Wolverine's traveling team to the state competition in Anchorage. Cook Inlet Tribal Council is host to hundreds of athletes from around the state to compete at Begich Middle School. Last year the head count on young athletes' ages 6-13 was

With the help of funding from Sitnasuak Native Corporation Nome was able to bring six students to add to that mix. Nome's team captured the moment. Athletes Ivory Okleasik, Josh Bourdon and Michael Scott walked away with five of the top four medals in three different events.

Dominating the field for the Boys was a young man by the name of Elvis. For real. Elvis entered the building and walked away with three gold medals in the 5th and 6th grade division, sweeping all of the possible events in his age group. Saturday's meet matched Elvis' tune. Not to step on anyone's blue suede shoes, but Orlin Gologergen walked in them for a while when he matched Elvis' high tune of 58" in the Alaskan High kick, tying the winning height of last year's first place male at state. Pretty big shoes to fill- if not blue or

For the gals Emily Pomrenke also made a match. Kicking to the height of 72" in the one foot high kick puts her in the same boat as Gologergen. Her winning kick tied Ivory Okleasik's second place height at JNYO State 2011.

Okleasik and Pomrenke voiced interest in NYO the first week of their school year. With that same determination, Emily informed Coach Earp that she was "ready." Patience, flexibility, height, and raw talent have defined her early NYO career. The shoes fit.

Ten students from Nome Elementary will be traveling to Anchorage to compete in Cook Inlet Tribal Councils State Junior Native Olympics this week.

All of the students are in 5th and 6th grade. As such, they will be competing in the three events allotted to the age group.

Competition starts at Friday afternoon with the Alaskan High Kick. Named to the team are as follows: Orlin Gologergen, Harrison Moore, Jaimie Yi, Sammy Walkalkia, Randel Iyatunguk, Emily Pomrenke, Taeler Brunette, Kastyn Lie, Katherine Scott, Elizabeth "Bessie" Alowa. Members of the traveling team are representative of much hard work for an awesome season.

Thanks go to those students who came out and worked hard during the regular season and for always working toward their personal best. Dynamite!

Follow the students' results online, and keep posted for results from our talented young athletes! http://www.citci.com/nyogamesalaska

Pete Kaiser wins inaugural Paul Johnson 450 Memorial sled dog race

By Diana Haecker

A new sled dog race arrived in town and crowned Pete Kaiser of Bethel champion of the first Paul Johnson Memorial 450 sled dog race organized by the Norton Sound Sled Dog club based in Unalakleet. The 24-year-old Bethel musher mastered the 450-mile long race that went from Unalakleet to Kaltag, back to Unalakleet and up the coast to Nome in three days, 13 hours and 47 minutes. Kaiser crossed the finish line on

River Street in front of the Mini Convention Center at 5:47 a.m. on Sunday morning with nine dogs in harness

Within two minutes, the sirens were going off again for runner-up John Schandelmeier of Paxon. Judy Currier of Two Rivers came in third just 48 minutes after Schandelmeier and within 41 minutes Richie Diehl, Scott Smith, DeeDee Jonrowe and Michelle Phillips finished their race. Almost two hours later Louie Ambrose of St. Michael finished the race, followed an hour later by Nome's Aaron Burmeister. Jerry Sousa of Talkeetna came in tenth place and the last musher, Jamie Kinzer arrived in Nome on Sunday night at 9:40 p.m.

The race went really well, we had 11 mushers start and all 11 finished within 14 hours," organizer Middy Johnson said. In the beginning of the race overflow on the river forced organizers to reroute the start and reroute the trail for six miles overland. On the trail crossing Norton Bay from Shaktoolik to Koyuk, jumble ice obstructed the trail. Pete Kaiser wrote on his blog that the trail dead ended in a bunch of jumble ice the size of houses. Volunteers from Koyuk came to assist the top eight teams that were caught in the maze of jumble ice and overflow. They were told to wait until snowmachine volunteers and the Norton Sound sled dog club's trail crew arrived to get them on a safe trail to the mainland. Eventually the mushers all made it through and continued on up

The Portage 200 sled dog race was held at the same time. The race took teams from Unalakleet to Kaltag and back to Unalakleet. Pat Moon won the Portage Race, followed by Mary Helwig, Donald Towarak, Alex Otten and Sheldon Katchatag.

Nome JV Girls win Norton Sound Shootout

By Stephen Palmatier

With the Nome varsity ladies having the weekend off, it was a chance for the Nome JV Lady Nanooks to shine, and they did just that. The Nanooks JV defeated the Koyuk JV ladies in both games played this past weekend, both by doing so in thrilling fashion.

In the first game, it came down to overtime as the Nome ladies were able to prevail 47-43. It was a game of two halves for Nome, as the ladies were only able to muster up 10 points in the entire first half. However, in the second half, they outscored Koyuk 30-17 to set up an overtime period where their second half momentum carried them to the victory. Ariana Horner shined in the game for Nome, scoring a game high 22 points, including 19 of them coming in the second half and overtime. Ashley Tobuk also contributed in a strong way, adding 16 points of her own for the Nanooks. The two players, scoring a combined 38 of Nome's 47 points, were enough to get the Nanooks over the top. Captains Maxine Kimoktoak and Renee Kimoktoak had solid scoring days for Koyuk, scoring a combined 31 points of their own in the loss.

In the second game, the action was more of the same as both teams played very evenly with one another. This time, Nome again was able to survive, winning 36-34 in regulation. This time Nome had a 22-14 lead at halftime and nearly blew the halftime lead after coming back strong in the second half the previous game. Tobuk again had a solid game for the Nanooks, leading them in scoring with 15 points. Horner added an additional 10 to go with it. For Koyuk, the same two players played strong again as Renee Kimoktoak had 12 points while Maxine Kimoktoak added 8 of her own. The difference in this game was the defense, as both teams were able to make adjustments defensively after seeing each other play the day before.

Much like the boys JV, the Norton Sound Shootout tournament was a great way to see the future of the Lady Nanooks varsity. Some players like Horner and Dawn Wehde, who already are bench players for the varsity, got extra playing time to gain both experience and skill.

Now, as we move on from the JV squads, we focus again on the varsity squads as the Lady Nanooks will be back in action this coming weekend when they host Dillingham at the Den of the Mighty Nanooks in what will be the final home games of the year for the ladies of Nome.

Nome JV Boys, Teller split at Norton Sound Shootout

By Stephen Palmatier

This past weekend the Nome Nanooks varsity boys basketball squad took a backseat as the junior varsity boys team were the main attraction. The Nome Nanooks JV team was a part of the Norton Sound Shootout held at the Den of the Mighty Nanooks. There, they played a JV boys team from Teller, the only other team able to get into Nome for the tournament.

In the two games played, the two teams split, with Teller holding on for the win in the first one and the Nanooks winning in the second game. In the first game, it was a defensive struggle as Teller came out on top 25-24. It was a game that was full of turnovers and bad offenses as both teams struggled to put any shots in the hoop. In the third quarter for Nome, they scored only 2 points and had a total of 16 by the end of three quarters. The same was true for Teller, as they had only 2 points in the opening period and had 15 after three quarters.

For Nome, the leading scorer was Alex Gray who had 9 points and Wink Winkleman added 8 more points. On the Teller side, captain Darren Virg-In led the scoring with only 8 points. It was a game that had very little efficiency perhaps showing that not only did the team not have much game experience but also the nerves may have set in from the size of the crowd.

In the second game, it was a much different story for Nome as they were able to win 44-35. The offense seemed much more efficient for both teams having just played each other the day before. The Nanooks scored 14 points in the opening quarter, nearly as many as in the first three quarters from the game before. Gray again led the scoring for Nome with 12 points and Emery Booshu, who was scoreless in the first game added 11 points in this one.

We played a better ball game said Dan Sullivan, head coach of the Nome JV boys. "We reduced our mistakes, passed the ball better, and were more patient in this game," said Sullivan speaking about

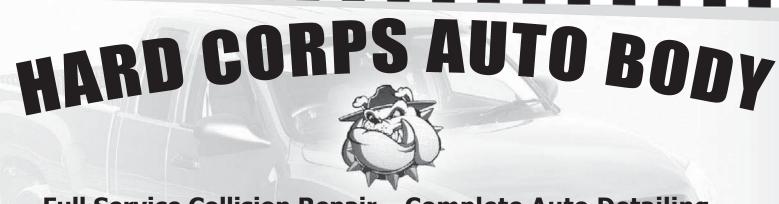

For Teller, the star of the game was Cameron Okboak who scored a game high 17 points in the loss.

Regardless of results for this weekend for the Nome JV, this weekend was more about the players themselves. Many of the players on the JV team are underclassman in high school, and it was a good way not only for them to gain experience playing competitively, but also a good way for fans to see the future of Nome varsity basketball.

"I think we have any number of kids who have potential for the future," said Sullivan. "It will take a lot of dedication, but I think they can fill the shoes of varsity players now," said Sullivan.

The Nome varsity boys squad, looking to keep their one loss record on the line, get back into action after having the weekend off with another weekend on the road, this time to Dillingham.

"The Black Door!" Pastor Mike Christian - River of Life Assembly of God Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

Several years ago, during one of the most turbulent wars in the Middle East, a spy was captured. The general of the Persian army, a man of intelligence and compassion, had adopted an unusual custom for situations such as this. He permitted the prisoner to make the choice of either facing a firing squad or passing through the "Black Door."

As the moment of the execution drew near, the general ordered the spy to be brought before him for a final interview. The general asked the spy; "So, What shall it be – The Firing Squad or The Black Door?"

The prisoner hesitated for a few minutes and then made the choice of the firing squad. The spy was taken out into the courtyard and placed in front of the soldiers and their guns. Within a few seconds the guns sounded off, their shots announcing that the grim sentence had been fulfilled.

The General sadly stared down at his boots. After a minute or so, he looked up into the face of his young aide and said; "You see how it is men? They will always prefer the known to the unknown, even if it means certain death. It is the characteristic of most people to be afraid of that which is un-

The aide looked into the eyes of the General and asked: "What lies beyond the 'Black Door' general?"

"Freedom," the general replied, "Freedom." "And I've only known a few men who were brave enough to go through the 'Black Door.'"

My friends, each and every day we face unknown things in life. Granted, our choices will not always be a matter of "Life and Death," but the fact remains, we must make choices every day that we live. And some of the choices we do make will have an effect on whether or not we live a life of success and one in which we experience "true freedom!"

There is a "door" that stands before us this very moment, that if opened, will give us the most wonderful opportunity to experience and live a life that is filled with "success and true freedom!"

This "door" is the "door to our heart and soul!" Listen to what it says in Revelation 3:20

"Here I am! I stand at the 'Door' and knock. If anyone hears my voice and opens the 'Door,' I will come in and eat with him, and he with me.'

Folks, this "Door" is one that only you and I can open! No one else can do it for us! It is we who must hear the voice of the Lord, and respond by opening the "Door" to let him into our hearts, our souls, and our lives. Jesus is standing right there in front of the "Door" to your heart right now, and he wants to come in!

Jesus wants to be that friend that sticks closer than a brother to each and every one of us this evening! He wants to become an intimate friend, a vital part of our lives on a daily basis. He wants to be more than a Christmas or Easter Lord! Jesus wants to be Lord of your and my life all the time!

He wants to become our friend, our Lord, our intercessor and most of all - our Savior! But before this can take place, we must first open the door to our heart.

Once we open the "Door," we will begin to experience a the fullness of joy, the abundance of blessings, the presence of his Holy Spirit, the power and majesty, the glory of our God!

There is nothing on the other side of the "Door" to fear! Instead of choosing the path that leads to certain "Eternal Death," let us be brave enough, filled with faith enough, to open that "Door" that will allow Jesus to come into our heart and soul! Then, we will know what it means to truly be set

Where do you get your salt?

Alaska Family Doctor

Americans acquire most of their salt from ten common food categories according to a new report from the Center for Disease Control

Salt is essential for life. Every cell in the human body uses sodium (salt) to function properly and the body tightly regulates the amount of salt in the blood stream. Too much salt can be a problem though. Excess salt intake has been associated with hypertension, stroke, osteoporosis, kidney stones and stomach cancer.

For this reason, the American Heart Association recommends a daily limit of 2,300 mg of sodium for healthy young adults, roughly one teaspoon of table salt, and a lower goal, 1,500 mg, about 3/4 teaspoon of salt, for older patients or those with high blood pressure, heart disease, or risk factors for stroke. Most Americans consume over 3,600 mg of sodium daily, which is well over the recommended amounts.

The source of this extra salt may be surprising. The saltshaker is not necessarily the culprit. According to the CDC, the most common sources of extra sodium are: bread and rolls; sandwich meats; pizza; processed chicken; soups; hamburgers; pasta dishes; and meatloaf. Savory snacks, like potato chips, were last on the list.

There is an ongoing medical controversy regarding the health effects of this excess dietary salt.

Last year, authors of a study in the American Journal of Hypertension suggested that restricting dietary salt makes no difference in a person's overall heart health. After reviewing multiple studies on the effects of low-salt diets, the researchers concluded that there is no strong evidence that salt reduction reduces a person's chances of death from high blood pressure or heart

Preventive-medicine experts immediately cried foul in a response published later in the journal Lancet. The totality of evidence, including epidemiological studies, animal studies, randomized trials, and now outcome studies all show the substantial benefits in reducing the average intake of salt."

About half of the studies to date show a cardiovascular benefit to reducing salt in the diet. The other half demonstrates no effect or, worse, a harmful effect to DOCTOR restricting dietary salt.

The controversy is not new. The World Health Organization has named salt reduction as a priority in treating non-communicable diseases world-However, surveys from around the world show that, despite wide variations in diet and culture, most people consume the same amount of salt daily. This has led some researchers to hypothesize that humans have a hard-wired set point in the brain for salt intake. This would theoretically make it very hard to reduce overall salt intake over time.

Furthermore, forced salt restriction may result in unintended consequences. Just as the "low-fat" diets of the 1980s caused people to eat more sugar, leading to obesity, people may consume larger portions of "low-salt" foods, and thereby more calories, in order to keep their sodium intake stable.

The key is balance. Dietary sodium is an essential part of the human diet. Added sodium, table salt, is rarely needed in a well-balanced healthy meal of vegetables, healthy meats, like fish, and healthy oils, like olive oil. We tend to add salt to otherwise unhealthy foods, like chips, fried foods and red meats. In general, it is the food itself, not the salt content that is healthy or harm-

So how can people balance their daily intake of sodium? Here are a few ideas:

First, read labels. The CDC recontinued on page 12

NOTICE OF PROPOSED CHANGES IN THE REGULATIONS OF THE ALASKA DEPARMENT OF FISH AND GAME

The Alaska Department of Fish and Game (ADF&G) proposes to adopt regulation changes in Title 5 of the Alaska Administrative Code, dealing with waters important for the spawning, rearing or migration of anadromous fish, including the

5 AAC 95.011 is proposed to be changed as fol-

The Atlas to the Catalog of Waters Important for the Spawning, Rearing, or Migration of Anadro-mous Fishes and Catalog of Waters Important for the Spawning, Rearing, or Migration of Anadro-mous Fishes (Atlas and Catalog), which are adopted by reference in 5 AAC 95.011, will be revised and updated.

Alaska Statute 16.05.871 requires, among other actions, that the Commissioner of the ADF&G "specify" the rivers, lakes and streams or portions of them that are important for the spawning, rear-ing or migration of anadromous fish. The Commissioner must review plans and specifications of any proposed work or use occurring within a specified anadromous river, lake, or stream. If the Commissioner determines that the plans and specifications provide for the proper protection of fish and game the project will be approved and a Fish Habitat Permit will be issued by the ADF&G, Division of Habitat. The Catalog and Atlas identify and list these anadromous waters and are used by the Commissioner to determine whether such a permit is required for any particular project.

Several revisions are proposed to be made to the Atlas and Catalog. The list of rivers, lakes, and streams will be updated, including additions, delerions, and changes to the legal descriptions of many of these waters. Minor revisions will be made to the introduction of the Catalog and Atlas, including updates to ADESC recipied contact in including updates to ADF&G regional contact in-formation. Species-specific information will be used in place of undifferentiated species informa-tion whereographics tion wherever possible.

You may comment on the proposed regulation changes, including the potential costs to private persons of complying with the proposed changes, by submitting written comments to Paul Blanche, Alaska Department of Fish and Game, 333 Raspberry Rd. Suite 2068, Anchorage, Alaska 99518 or by e-mail to paul.blanche@alaska.gov. The comments must be received no later than March

The proposed changes for all six regions of Alaska (Southeastern, Southcentral, Southwestern, Western, Arctic, and Interior) are available for inspection and copying at: the ADF&G offices in Anchorage at 333 Raspberry Rd., in Fairbanks at 1300 College Rd., and in Douglas at 802 3° St.; the Alaska Resources Library in Anchorage; and the State Library in Juneau. Where do you get your salt?

port shows that many common foods, like breads, canned soups, fried foods and processed meats are very high in hidden sodium. Select foods with a lower amount of sodium per serving and rinse saltpreserved and canned foods.

Second, boost the amount of potassium in the diet to a healthy level. Foods rich in potassium are good for your heart and balance the effects of sodium. Potassium is best obtained from the diet. Foods rich in potassium include fruits, vegetables, whole grains, salmon and beans. Potassium supplements can be dangerous and should only be taken under the direction of a physician. People with kidney disease should talk with a provider about the amount of daily potassium that is

Third, make sure that foods you prepare pass the test of tears. That is, does the food taste saltier than tears? Interestingly, the concentration of sodium in human tears remains constant and roughly equals the concentration of sodium in the blood stream. Therefore, foods that taste less salty than tears are likely better for your heart. Consider using the lowest amount of salt necessary when preserving your own foods.

Finally. remember the colors of salt. Not all salt is white. Try to limit added salt in its other colors, like red salt in ketchup or salsa, yellow salts like mustard, and green salts like pickles or relish. And go easy on brown salts like soy sauce, gravy, and steak sauce.

As a general rule, adding salt in any color to food is a red flag that the food itself may be unhealthy and should be limited. Adjusting your diet to include more fruits, vegetables, herbs and spices may be a challenge at first, but taste buds will easily accommodate a more balanced intake of salt and your heart will appreciate your efforts to obtain sodium through a balance of these healthy foods.

Notice of Availability Draft Environmental Assessment Addressing the Closure of USCG Long Range Aids to Navigation (LORAN-C) Station Port Clarence, Alaska

U.S. Coast Guard (USCG) LORAN-C Station in Port Clarence, Alaska – A Draft Environmental Assessment (EA) has been prepared to address the disposal of all real property at the LORAN-C Station Port Clarence, Alaska. At present, the LORAN-C Station Port Clarence has been decommissioned. LORAN artifacts, equipment, and personnel have been removed. The EA outlines the alternatives available for the real property disposal process. Under the Proposed Action, all real property would be relinquished to the Bureau of Land Management; buildings and infrastructure would remain onsite; and no demolition would occur. There would be no new construction activities and no grading of land.

USCG is proposing to issue a Finding of No Significant Impact (FONSI) based on the Draft EA. The analysis considered the potential effects of the Proposed Action and alternatives, including the No Action Alternative on the following resource areas: air quality, noise, earth resources, cultural resources, biological resources, water resources, land use, infrastructure, and hazardous substances. The results of the Draft EA indicate that the Proposed Action would not have a significant impact on the environment, indicating that a FONSI would be appropriate. An Environmental Impact Statement is not considered necessary to implement the Proposed Action.

Copies of the Draft EA and Draft FONSI are available for review at the Teller City Office, 9 Lake Side Dr, Teller, AK 99778; the Brevig Mission Council Office, 3 Clarence Rd, Brevig Mission, AK 99785; and the Kegoayah Kozga Library, 223 Front Street, Nome, AK 99762. Comments on the Draft EA will be accepted until March 17, 2012.

Written comments and inquiries on the Draft EA and Draft FONSI should be directed to Daniel Koski-Karell, Ph.D., U.S. Coast Guard Office of Environmental Management, 2100 2nd Street Southwest Stop 7901, Washington, DC 20593-7901, by calling (202) 475 5683, or by email to Daniel.A.Koski-Karell@uscg.mil.

Quyanna Care Center recognized as one of top nursing homes in the nation

On February 7 US News announced that Quyanna Care Center, a 15-bed nursing home, owned and operated by Norton Sound Health Corporation and co-located with Norton Sound Regional Hospital, made the 2012 Honor Roll for achieving a 5 out of 5-star rating for four quarters in a row. QCC was one of only 39 nursing homes in the nation to meet the quality standards set by Medicare and Medicaid. U.S. News reviewed 15,000 nursing homes and only 39 of these nursing homes received perfect five start ratings, four quarters in a row, from the Federal Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services in all three areas- health inspections, nurse staffing and quality of care. QCC was the only nursing home in the state of Alaska to make the 2012 Honor Roll.

The employees that work with the elders in their QCC home and the multidisciplinary staff that work together on a daily basis to ensure a good system is in place deserve the credit for achieving the highest quality of care and life standards possible. QCC has dedicated, compassionate and performance-improvement focused staff. QCC doesn't settle for OK results, they want the best for the elders." QCC's annual, unannounced surveys from the licensing unit at the State of Alaska gives them the opportunity to ensure quality of care and quality of life exceed those standards. When the surveyors come on-site for a four day visit, they review over 700 regulatory standards to ensure compliance. It is a very intense week, but it gives every department the opportunity to demonstrate the good work they are doing and receive feedback from the licensing agency. Even though QCC's nursing home is in bush Alaska, they have the same Medicaid and Medicare standards to meet as every other nursing home in the nation. QCC is very proud of this recent report.

A five per cent bid bond is required. Payment and performance bonds will also be required. The contract will be awarded to the lowest qualified Bidder as determined by the City. The City reserves the right to reject any and all proposals and to waive irregularities in the proposals.

Debit card dangers

BBB Offers Safe Swiping Tips Credit or debit? Choosing the right option at the right time can help protect from unwanted charges and skimming scams.

When charged, debit cards automatically withdraw money directly from checking accounts; whereas credit cards extract funds from credit accounts. Most credit issuers carry zero liability policies so card users can dispute unauthorized charges from fraud and undelivered products or services. Debit cards typically carry limited liability policies that require cardholders to cover a percentage of the lost funds.

Bering Land Bridge National Preserve Grazing Exclosures

National Park Service (NPS) is considering establishing 18 fenced grazing exclosures to study lichen growth rates and ungulate (caribou, reindeer, muskox) grazing effects in Bering Land Bridge National Preserve (BELA), Alaska starting in the summer of 2012. Each exclosure fence would be 30 ft x 30 ft, 6 ft high, established for 30-50 years, and accessed by helicopter for both construction and regular readings of vegetation plots. Reading of vegetation plots would be conducted once every 10 years. The project area is eligible for wilderness but is not designated as wilderness. The two primary purposes of the proposal are 1) to provide data for a scientifically-based reindeer grazing management plan, and 2) to provide long-term data on caribou habitat quality and forage quantity for the Western Arctic Caribou Herd's winter range in BELA. A secondary objective of this 2nd purpose is to provide long-term data on climate-driven vegetation change in the absence of grazing.

To determine whether this project meets applicable environmental requirements, NPS has drafted an Environmental Assessment (EA). This EA is now available for public comment from February 7, 2012 until March 7, 2012. The EA is available online at:

http://parkplanning.nps.gov/projectHome.cfm?projectID=32156. The document is approximately 880 kb.

Alternately, hard copies may be obtained upon request to Jeanette Pomrenke (Jeanette_Pomrenke@nps.gov or 907-443-6101).

There are several ways to send public comments:

- 1. The preferred mechanism is via the website above.
- 2. Comments may be made by email or mail to: Jeanette Pomrenke (Jeanette_Pomrenke@nps.gov, National Park Service, PO Box 220, Nome, AK 99762).
- 3. Comments may also be delivered to the NPS office in Nome in person (Sitnasauk Building, Front Street, Nome, Alaska), or faxed to 907-443-6139.

TelAlaska has new area supervisor

By Diana Haecker

Beufort McComas is the new area supervisor for TelAlaska, McComas moved from Warroad in northern Minnesota to Nome to take the position. He said he's been in the telecommunication business since 1969 and has worked for telecommunications companies in Seattle, Bethel, Warroad and now in Nome. When the name sounds familiar, it is because his brother and retired TelAlaska employee Albert McComas has been a Nome resident for a long time.

Beufort McComas said this is the first time, however, that he has been to Nome and that he loves it already. "Nome is in songs, Nome is mentioned in books, and I was very curious about it," McComas said. He said he likes it great so far and that the climate is not that much different from northern Minnesota. McComas is eager to travel to the Bering Strait and Norton Sound communities served by TelAlaska and announced that once spring comes around and a solid runway is established in Little Diomede, that community as well as Wales would get hooked up with cell provided service phone providers may be trustworthy and well-intentioned, but there are other potential risks, such as: shared wireless networks, unsecure Internet connections, data breaches, company impostors, hackers and other online schemers. There is significant anonymity on the Web so shop safely; review companies carefully, read privacy policies and make sure sites are secure before releasing payment information.

ATM Cash: Skimmers tamper with automatic teller machines and card terminals by inserting skimming devices on card readers and installing miniature spy cameras. Only use monitored ATMs in well-lit areas near trusted banks and busy shopping centers. Avoid using machines with askew card slots and keypads.

Gas: Card skimmers also meddle with unattended pay-at-the-pump gas station terminals; low-traffic highway rest stops can be particularly vulnerable.

Dining and Drinking: Restaurants, food delivery services and bars sometimes keep customer payment information on file, hold cards for tabs or process payments behind closed doors. Once cards are out of sight, they are at risk of falling into the wrong hands; cards can get overcharged or copied and used without permission.

Down Payments and Deposits: Companies that sell expensive merchandise may offer layaway programs or allow consumers to reserve goods with deposits. It is best to charge pre-payments and pricey purchases on credit cards, in case businesses close unexpectedly or orders are not fulfilled.

Korean adventurers attempt Bering Strait crossing on foot

A group of four Korean adventurers are getting ready this week to cross the Bering Strait from Uelen to Wales. Equipped with brand-new gear, sleds and dried food rations, they finalized their preparations in Nome before flying to Russia with Captain Suong Taek Hong is the leader of the expedition, his traveling companions are Youn The Keun, Yi Chan Jung, Kim Young Sun and Chai Il Jeong. They planned last week to train a few days in Nome and then head on to Russia with Bering Air to attempt the crossing.

Hong said through an interpreter that they have a window of five days to wait for the best conditions before they attempt the crossing. He believes it takes 10 to 15 days to walk across the Bering Strait to Wales and that they are prepared to swim through open water if they have to by using survival suits and tying their supply sleds to their bodies.

Hong said they tried the crossing four years ago and tried to get the necessary permits from Russia but bureaucracy held up their crossing attempt. Hong said that they prepared for their journey by their lifestyle as adventurers and climbers. He said that the most important thing in the endeavor is experience, which he says he has by virtue of having crossed Greenland by dog sled, Antarctica and having climbed in the Himalayas. "I am a professional," he said through the interpreter. As they are not allowed to take guns across the border, the adventurers are taking two satellite phones and packed bear spray and noise guns for protection.

In 1998, Russian adventurer Dmitry Shparo and his son Matvey succeeded in making the first modern day crossing of the frozen Bering Strait on skis. In March 2006 Karl Bushby of England and French-American adventurer Dimitri Kieffer crossed the strait on foot, walking across a frozen 56 miles in 15 days. Once arriving at the Russian side, they were arrested for not entering Russia through a border controlled port of entry.

Iron Dogs head to Nome, halfway home

By Stephen Palmatier

The ultimate and grueling snowmachine race in the world is off and running. Yes, indeed it is that time of the year when the best in snowmachine racing get put to the test in the Iron Dog Race, a 2,000 mile journey which not only tests the riders physically but mentally

The race began in Big Lake this past Sunday as 31 different teams of two riders set off to race for the ultimate prize in snowmachining. One of the teams in this year's race is James "Tre" West and Tyler Huntington, who have both competed in the race six times West, who is from Nome feels very good entering the

"I feel pretty confident this year," said West. "I have a new partner in Tyler Huntington who has won the race the last two years, so I feel good about it," said

With the amount of experience combined between the two teammates along with Huntington's past success, it's easy to see why West feels as confident as he

West and Huntington began Sunday starting in the 17th position, which is virtually the middle of the pack. They started 35 minutes after the first team went out, but the time difference does not factor at all for the rest of the race. At the first layover in McGrath, it will be recorded for the amount of time it took each group to get from Big Lake to McGrath, which then sets up when they let each rider leave from McGrath

The Iron Dog, which started back in 1984 was originally only a 1,000 mile race, but since then it has doubled in distance.

Many people over the years have had the experience racing in the Iron Dog before multiple times.

"I really enjoy it. Once you get going, the racing it self can be a lot of fun," said John Bahnke, who raced in the Iron Dog in 1998, 2002, 2008 and 2010.

The Iron Dog race is an event that not only is tough, but also the preparation is just as intense.

"It definitely takes a lot of time beforehand," said Bahnke. "You see the weeks and weeks of preparation on the snowmachines and getting ready with the body both physically and mentally as well," said Bahnke.

The race, which began this past Sunday will head north until it reaches Nome, the halfway point of the race. After a layover in Nome, the riders then will shift east as they head for the finish in Fairbanks. The race itself will take around a week to complete.

Pick your doctor

NSHC takes patientcentered approach to health care

By Diana Haecker

Norton Sound Health Corporation changed the way out patient services are delivered and, among other things, the change allows patients to choose their doctor or physician. Angie Gorn, vice president Hospital Services, explained that NSHC is embracing the so-called patient centered medical home philosophy. The idea is to leave it up to the patients to pick their preferred doctor who in turn is backed by a whole team of nurses and other staff that form a

Sixth graders will stay put

By Lori Head

After three weeks of surveys, meetings, interviews and presentations Mike Brawner, superintendent of Nome Public Schools, recommended to the school board that the sixth graders remain at the elementary school. Percentages varied between six groups surveyed, ranging from 66 percent of the community favoring they stay put to 80 percent of current junior high students voting for the same. The only dissenting percentages came from Nome's current fifth graders who would have been the first students of a newly formed middle school. They were ready to make the change with 82 percent voting to send themselves out to the junior high next year. Tweaking the original option a bit, Brawner recommended hiring an additional teacher for the fifth and sixth graders rather than taking one from the junior high school and maintaining the fourth grade aide position which was "a late addition" this school year. He also withdrew the idea of hiring a dean of students.

56er report

Dan Eide began his oversight of the 56ers on February 1 and has been working with the students, teachers and parents on issues including respectfully addressing each other, classroom management with consistent rules and processes, and the block schedule. "The first week, or the first three days I was there, I ended up taking eight students home after school and visiting with parents. Out of those eight families, every one of them were supportive... They wanted what was best for kids. They understood the problems we were having in the 56er pod with attitudes and things like that," reported Eide.

"Bad behavior wins if good people do nothing," stated Eide. He feels that the 56ers should be leaders at the school and is working on helping the ten percent that interfere with that goal. Nome Eskimo Community has helped by sending two tutors and Eide is encouraged with progress he's seen as there were two days last week with zero discipline referrals.

UME investigation: Seals don't show radiation, scientists say

By Diana Haecker

Preliminary screening of tissue samples from sick and healthy seals and walruses have not shown elevated radiation levels, says the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. The federal agency and a team of international scientists are still investigating the cause of a mysterious disease that causes lesions, hair loss and apathy in ice seals and some walruses.

After hunters and rural residents observed seals with significant hair loss, skin lesions and unusually tame behavior, NOAA declared an unusual mortality event, which triggered a more thorough investigation to shed light on the cause and course of the disease.

Part of the investigation is to find out whether the meltdown of the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear plant in March 2011 and its outfall could have anything to do with the disease. Dr. John Kelley and Douglas Dasher took the lead for the radiation assessment and are working at the University of Alaska Fairbanks School of Fisheries and Ocean Sciences among other schools. The scientists are examining muscle tissue from sick and healthy pinnipeds for the presence of Cesium-134 and Cesium-137.

Final results are pending, but in a preliminary assessment, the scientists found no radiation levels in the seals. The researchers also didn't find evidence that supports impacts to marine mammals in Alaska, after the nuclear outfall in Japan.

Hi Nancy,

I was just blown away when I read in the recent All Around the Sound section that Nome's Quyanna Care Center was ranked as one of the 39 best nursing homes in the country, out of 15,000 nursing homes surveyed! This should be front page news all across Alaska! Just imagine, Nome's Quyanna Care Center ranks right up there with the some of the nation's most expensive and exclusive nursing homes. What a huge honor! My hearty congratulations to all the staff who helped QCC received perfect score in all categories for the past year. You make us proud — and comforted that such great care is available right here in Nome. Quyanna!

Sue Steinacher Nome, AK

Dear Nancy:

Superintendent Mike Brawner should be commended for focusing community attention on shocking data describing student performance at Nome Public Schools. As reported in the February 16, 2012 edition of the Nome Nugget ("Where Should the Sixth Graders Go?"), roughly 40 percent of students in grades 5 through 8 read about four years below their grade level:

- 51 percent of eighth graders read at a third grade level or lower (five years behind);
- 37 percent of seventh graders read at a third grade level or lower (four years behind):
- 38 percent of sixth graders read at or below the second grade level (four years behind); and
- 40 percent of 5th graders are reading at a second grade level (three years behind).

The data are not news to school administrators and staff. NPS has performed poorly on such assessments for many years. Both Nome Elementary School and Beltz are at year three of level five of failing to make Adequate Yearly Progress under the No Child Left Behind Act.

Over the past decade, NPS has tried to raise reading scores by devoting more time to instruction, purchasing new instructional materials, and training and retraining instructional staff. It is not surprising that these attempts have been futile—the underlying causes are too broad.

Museum Editor's Note: The darn grammar and spelling errors are all his!

As promised, the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is pleased to present another passage from an unpublished manuscript in our archives. We know little about Chas. L. Guimond, the author of these short stories. He was born Leo Charles Guimond in Holyoke, Massachusetts on November 21, 1879. He was 21 years old when he landed on our beaches to seek his fortune in gold. Guimond wrote several entertaining stories in his journal throughout the long, cold Nome winter of 1900-1901. The Museum will publish more of Chas's musings in upcoming issues of The Nome Nugget.

For now let's go back in time 111 years ago to a small cabin occupied by seven grown men down on the beach west of Nome..

"Washington's Birthday"

By Chas.L.Guimond Nome City, Alaska February 22-1901

This is a day of rejoicings! Rejoicing at the anniversary of the birth of the father of this country, George Washington. This is a day upon which the American heart swells with pride - proud of doing homage to America's most illustrious son. In every city, town, village or hamlet, in this our beloved country, of which the American heart is so justly proud, the name of Geo. Washington is on every lip. The spirit of freedom and liberty which he planted in the Americans' heart, will remain as firmly planted in the coming generations' hearts, as though he had planted them upon the battlements of Heaven. In war, as in private life, he was a God fearing man. For the love of freedom and liberty, he achieved for his country what no other could have done and gave to his country the most substantial government upon the face of the earth. Neither the eloquence of a Demosthenes, nor the pen of a Shakespeare, could picture out the grand and noble example which he has set to the world, which will never be forgotten, that no country can be free and enjoy freedom and liberty with a Republican form of government. He has led, and others have followed in his footsteps. His, is a name that will never go down in oblivion, as long as the Stars and Stripes float over the heads of all true Americans. Well may we rejoice in celebrating his birthday. All glory to the father of this country, George Washington.

Get Involved

Bad government happens when good people do nothing. In Nome and in other western Alaskan communities there is a tendency for folks to be very accepting of the status quo. There is a reluctance to challenge those in power. This does not necessarily mean that the public is happy with the way their city is run.

We have many opportunities to get involved yet we are content to quietly grumble and let someone else speak for us. However, they don't. At many community meetings there are only one or two, if any, members of the public present. Where are the concerned citizens? Where is the community backbone? Where is our spine? At times folks will contact the newspaper saying, "You ought to write about... When they are told to take the problem to the city council, school board, or utility board they go mute.

It's important for responsible citizens to get involved with government. Attend our public meetings, keep informed and be the public watchdog. We have a lot of important issues in our town's future. Now is not the time to sit quietly and get run over by a steamroller.

LEPC tackles communications issues

By Diana Haecker

During a regular meeting of the Local Emergency Planning Commission last week at the Fire Hall, discussions turned to the need of a back-up communications system in the event of power failures during emergency situations. For example, during the recent winter storm in November, a telephone router failure caused some telephone lines to malfunction, including the 9-1-1 emergency lines that allow Nome residents to contact the Nome Emergency Dispatch Center. Police Chief John Papasodora said the Incident Command and the Emergency Dispatch Center fell back on plan B and with the help of NJUS' manager John Handeland, cell phones were procured and used as back-up 9-1-1 communication. LEPC Chair Tom Vaden made suggestions that the LEPC acquire an Iridium satellite telephone system to use in the event of telephone failures, and the subject is under discussion. Following the meeting, Papasodora told the Nugget that redundant and interoperable communications has been a priority for the emergency services community for several years and that improvements have been made to the communications capability of the entire emergency services community. These changes included development of a standardized communications matrix that is programmed into all mobile and hand-held radios which will allow greater communications capability in the event of an emergency; the acquisition of several base station units that can be set up in remote locations or used as backup to the main system and upgrades of communications equipment among the police, fire, ambulance and other emergency services providers. At the meeting, Papasodora offered a resolution to present to the City. The resolution would be to include the installation of an antenna and repeater site to highmast lighting towers that are slated for installation at the port. Papasodora said that installation of equipment on the high mast towers would enhance radio coverage on the south side of the city as well as extend radio coverage over the water where much of the gold dredging activity occurs. With the recent interest generated from the 'Bering Sea Gold' program, it is anticipated the need for reliable communications may be vital to rescue operations resulting from ill-prepared dredge operators who may find themselves in adverse conditions.

In other business, emergency planner Mimi Farley reported that she had sent out 172 letters to businesses, requesting Tier 2 reporting of hazardous materials. Only three companies responded and reported their materials. Alaska Gold Co. was not one of them, although chemicals and explosives used at the failed Rock Creek gold mine are still present in Nome. NovaGold Resources Inc., the parent company, insists that they are exempt from Tier 2 reporting because there are reporting to the Mining Safety and Health Administration, MSHA.

working on the initiative for a while and that they asked patients since November to choose their primary care provider. In case of an acute illness or hospital visit without appointment, Gorn explained that acute care issues would be managed as walk-ins and be seen by available staff. Gorn said that this too would change in July and those cases would be handled in the urgent care clinic. "Once we're in the new hospital we'll have a fast track for acute care cases," Gorn said.

Two primary care teams have been created to deliver primary care at NSHC. They are consisting of doctors, certified medical assistants. licensed practical nurse and other support staff. They begin their day with a "huddle" at 8:30 a.m. At the huddle, they discuss patients to be seen that day, go over their charts. develop best strategies for the cases, check on prevention screenings and if lab work is done in time.

"This approach greatly improves communication between everybody involved," Gorn said. When the first patient shows up at 9 a.m. the team is ready with a strategy. Is this going to speed up the turn-around of patients per day? Gorn said that the hospital is doing time studies to see how quickly patients get through as every step is tracked for managers to see where bottleneck situations occur. "The goal is that patients are seen on time, get the best care and have preventive care built-in to the visit," Gorn said.

Gorn said that over the past year, managers, chief of staff and administrators have been learning about the model. "We've been taking baby steps and finally we said, it's time to implement it," Gorn said.

From November to January NSHC implemented "empanelment," a term used when patients were asked to pick their preferred doctor. "We still encourage patients to call in and let us know who their primary care provider should be,' Gorn said. This also holds true for patients who come in from the outlying communities. "We try to improve continuity for every patient," Gorn said.

NSHC currently employs seven medical doctors and doctors of osteopathic medicine. They are Karen O'Neill, M.D.; David Head, M.D.; Carolyn McDougald, D.O.; Alin Ledford, M.D.; Gina Salcedo, M.D.; John Salmon, PA; Sai-Ling Liu, Partner in Education awards

Marguerite LaRiviere, director of the Kegoayah Kozga Library, accepted a Partner in Education award from the school board at their February 16 regular meeting. LaRiviere was commended for her numerous efforts towards literacy including organizing and fundraising to bring author Brandon Mull to Nome, working closely with the NPS librarian and school reading incentive programs, ordering the necessary books for Battle of the Books each year, and holding a weekly preschool story hour as well as a summer reading program.

John Handeland, chairman of the Museum and Library Commission, also accepted a Partner in Education award on behalf of the Kegoayah Kozga Library which was recognized for its diligent efforts to support reading.

A third Partner in Education award was given to Malinda Besett, Head Start director, recognizing Kawerak and its partnership with NPS and the Pre-Kindergarten pro-

Hearing of delegations/individuals

Megs Testarmata, community member, acknowledged that there is now a bus running after school five days a week and asked the board to "consider requiring students that are failing, that have D's and F's in classes, to stay for that after school time and put in some time...to help these students succeed." Testarmata cited two school districts which are currently running a mandatory after school program for failing students.

Early Release Day – Feb. 24

Measures of Academic Progress results are in and students will be released early, Friday, February 24, in order for staff to review the data and prepare instructional plans accordingly. "Our latest winter assessment revealed that we have improved eight percent so now we have 46 of our third graders that are at the score of the 40th percentile...That is the mark that the board adopted in the Read 90 program...I think that's good news," shared Brawner.

Legislative Fly-In

Board member Jennifer Reader thanked everybody for the opportunity to go to Juneau and represent NPS. Mike Brawner, Reader and board member Barb Nickels met with several legislators requesting increased funding. Reader expounded, "As Mr. Brawner told each and every one of them, not in a stimulus package but in a continuous increase and something that we know will sustain our budget so that we can know that we can actually give teachers a job every year and maintain some of these amazing programs that we have started." Brawner will be going back to Juneau in March and Reader encouraged community members to express their opinions stressing that "the governor doesn't want to support the proposition that we'd like him to support right now. And so we really would like to encourage each and every one of you to kind of help us with that voice and tell him this is what we really want and need.'

Gay Sheffield with the Sea Grant Program at Northwest Campus in Nome said that so far there were 179 events - instances when one or more seals were found dead with symptoms of hair loss or alive showing symptoms — in a time span from May to November.

Sheffield aids the UME investigation and has so far sent in seven seals from Wales, Shishmaref, Diomede and Gambell for necropsies. The disease showed up in seals in Canada, the North Slope, along the northwestern Alaskan coast including the islands of Little Diomede and St. Lawrence, all the way down to Hooper Bay. Russian researchers report seals with the same symptoms and in northern Japan, spotted, ringed and ribbon seals were seen with lesions and hair loss in unusual haulout sites.

The research teams are still encouraging the public to report seals and walruses showing symptoms.

On your mark, get Head Start, go!

By Lori Head

Something interesting is happening at Head Start in Nome. Test scores are improving — dramatically! Janet Balice, Head Start teacher, shared some impressive data with the Nome Board of Education at their regular meeting on February 16.

The 2010-2011 school year was the second year of the Nome Public Schools preschool grant. The story begins with 31 students beginning last school year when they were four years old at Head Start. Two different tests were administered in the fall 2010 and again in spring 2011.

One was the Peabody Picture Vocabulary Test. Based on the national percentile rankings of the PPVT, the percentage of the 31 students was as follows:

| 31 Students Total | Fall 2010 | Spring 2011 |
|---------------------------------------|-----------|-------------|
| Top Quartile (75th-100th percentile) | 19% | 39% |
| Second Quartile (50th-74th percentile | e) 26% | 26% |
| Third Quartile (25th-49th percentile) | 19% | 32% |
| Bottom Quartile (0-24th percentile) | 35% | 3% |

Important to notice above is the 20 percent increase in the top quartile from 19 percent to 39 percent and the 32 percent decrease in the bottom °quartile.

The second test administered was the Developmental Indicators for the Assessment of Learning Third Edition (DIAL -3). Based on the national percentile rankings of the DIAL-3, the percentage of students in each quartile of the total score was as follows:

| 30 Students Total | Fall 2010 | Spring 2011 |
| Top Quartile (75th-100th percentile) | 23% | 80% |
| Second Quartile (50th-74th percentile) | 7% | 3% |
| Third Quartile (25 th -49 th percentile) | 33% | 7% |
| Bottom Quartile (0-24th percentile) | 37% | 10% |

Important to notice above is the dramatic increase of 57 percent of students in the top quartile from fall to spring and the 27 percent decrease in the bottom quartile. After Summer 2011 these Head Start students entered Nome Elementary School as kindergarteners. And they were tested again. This time it was the Dynamic Indicators of Basic Early Literacy Skills (DIBELS) test. Important to notice above is the upper segment of each column which is benchmark level, in other words, it's the target level. The middle column is written report.

Keller also noted that a reported small group of fifth and sixth graders "have been continuing to use to-bacco products, in particular chew or snuff." Some have been interviewed and searched and found in possession of snuff. "Consequences have included suspension as well as enrollment in a tobacco awareness program co-facilitated by Danielle Sylvester and Sherri Harvey," stated Keller.

Thirty candidates applied for the NES principal position beginning next school year. Four finalists were selected and will interview for the position the week of February 20. Brawner hopes to offer a contract to a successful candidate and bring a signed contract to the March school board meeting for approval.

Action Items

After previously meeting as a full board with Brawner and offering an extension of one year to his contract. the board needed to formalize that as an action item at this meeting. With board members Barb Nickels and Gloria Karmun absent, board president Betsy Brennan and board member Reader voted in favor of the extension, board member Amarok voted against it. The motion needed majority of the board membership, or three votes, to pass so it would have required all three board members in attendance to vote ves. Any board member may bring this back to the table at a future date.

All 34 tenured staff teacher contracts were approved by the school board.

Two polices, BP 4111.2 Legal Status Requirement and BP 4030 Nondiscrimination in Employment passed on their second and final readings.

Two other policies, BP 6161.4 Internet and BP 6159 Individualized Education Program both passed with their first reading.

The internet policy involved adding cyber bullying and harassment text to current policy to conform to requirements due by July 2012 to continue to qualify for E-Rate funding according to Robin Johnson, technology director.

BP 6159 Individualized Education Program was a policy update recommended by AASB (Association of Alaska School Boards). Sandy Harvey, special education coordinator, recommended the board approve the policy which included adopting the June 2011 Alaska State Special Education Handbook and an updated website link.

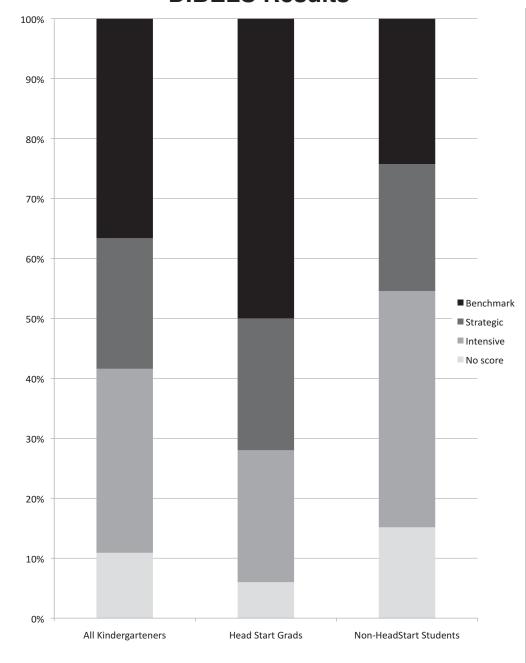

Next meeting

The Nome Board of Education will meet again on February 28, 2012 at 5:30 p.m. to discuss MAP results, a drug dog presentation and security cameras inside the buildings.

the Head Start graduates with 50 percent scoring at benchmark on their first assessment. All Kindergarteners total 65 students, including the 32 Head Start graduates, or almost half of NPS entering kindergarteners. In the far left column, the percentage of all Kindergarteners at benchmark is 37 percent. Kawerak's Head Start pro-

NOME'S COAST — Locked up by ice most of the year, Nome's coast offers a wealth of recoverable resources in the summer months. A strong coastal zone management program would give Nome as say in how activities can occur in Nome's coastal zone.

Legislature introduces new coastal zone management bill

By Diana Haecker

While a citizen initiative to bring back the coastal zone management program has progressed to appear on the 2012 primary or general election ballot, lawmakers last week introduced a bill that is identical to the initiative's text. Take note of the name, House Bill 325. It is destined to make headlines – again. Last year, the Alaska coastal zone management program — ACMP for short – was at the center of a bitter dispute between the two legislative bodies and the Governor's office over passing the extension of the program. The program – which is in effect in all states except for Alaska — allowed states and, to some extent, local residents and municipalities to put conditions on development activities on federal lands and waters.

The ACMP sunset on June 30 last year when the Legislature and the governor couldn't come to terms on a revamped program. During a special session devoted solely to resolving the issue, lawmakers failed to save it.

Last Friday, House Majority Leader Rep. Alan Austerman (Kodiak) and Representatives Neal Foster, Paul Seaton, Peggy Wilson, Bryce Edgmon, Reggie Joule, Beth Kertulla and Bob Herron introduced the new bill. HB 325, just like the initiative, proposes an Alaska Coastal Policy Board that would be created under the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development. It would consist of nine public members and nine alternate members appointed by the governor from a list composed of at least three names from each region, nominated by the coastal districts in each region. One public member and the alternate would be picked from Northwest Alaska, the Bering Strait region, including the BSSD area and the City of Nome, as well as southwest Alaska, Kodiak-Aleutian Islands. Upper Cook Inlet (including Mat-Su Borough and Anchorage), Lower Cook Inlet, Prince William Sound, northern Southeast and southern Southeast Alaska. Designated members would be the commissioners of the Dept. of Environmental Conservation, Alaska Fish and Game, Natural Resources and Commerce, Community and Economic Development. The members would serve staggered terms of three years.

The board's task would be to review and approve regulations to implement the ACMP and to "initiate an interagency program of strategic coastal and ocean planning for each geographic region of the state," the bill reads. The bill also calls for the creation of a division of ocean and coastal management within the Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development.

The division would make federal and state consistency determinations in case a project needs a permit from two or more state agencies. The division is also to help coastal districts to carry out their planning and management functions, and provide financial assistance to develop and maintain coastal management plans.

Prior to the demise of the ACMP, the program was at home at the Dept. of Natural Resources and was implemented by roughly 34 state employees. The bill lays out the objectives of the ACMP, and those run the gamut from protection, enhancement and restoration, to development.

One objective reads that the ACMP must be consistent with "the use, management, restoration and enhancement of the overall quality of the coastal environment for this generation and succeeding generations."

The second objective states that the "development of industrial or commercial enterprises are consistent with the social, cultural, historic, economic and environmental interests of the people of the state."

Another objective recognizes "the need for a continuing supply of energy to meet the requirements of the state and the contribution of a share of the state's resources to meet national energy needs," which alludes to coastal oil and gas developments.

Two objectives touch on the protection of the subsistence lifestyle. One calls on the "orderly, balanced use and protection of the resources of the coastal area consistent with sound conservation and sustained yield principles" and the "full and fair evaluation of all demands on and uses of the land and water in the coastal area."

Juneau mayor Bruce Botelho spearheaded the creation of the Alaska Sea Party for the purpose of putting the initiative on the ballot to let Alaskans determine whether or not Alaska should have a Coastal Zone management program.

Last week, Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell determined that the initiative has gathered 25,875 signatures from qualified Alaskans and this allows the appearance of the measure on the 2012 ballot. However, it is not quite certain that it will be on the ballot. "Whether the measure actually appears on the primary or general election ballot depends on the timing of the legislature's adjournment and whether they take action on substantially similar legislation," Lt. Gov. Treadwell said.

If the Lt. Governor finds the legislation to be "substantially similar" to the initiative, he can remove it from this fall's ballot. However that decision could be challenged in court, adds Paul Labolle, staff to Nome Rep. Neal Foster.

The bill has been read on the floor on Friday and it has been referred to the state's resources and finance committees. The Senate has not introduced a companion bill yet.

Nome Rep. Neal Foster said that he co-sponsored the bill along with seven other lawmakers that include the three colleagues from western Alaska, Bob Herron, Bryce Edgmon and Reggie Joule. Asked why he signed on to co-sponsor the bill, Foster said that he wanted to enhance the possibility of an ACMP bill passing either way. "It's better to give it two opportunities to succeed," Foster said. Plus, Foster added, by allowing it to go through the deliberative process in the Legislature, changes can be made, if necessary. If the initiative is approved by voters, language cannot be changed after the voters approved it. Explains Labolle, "If the ballot measure goes through, the resulting law can't be modified for two years."

Fears are that if it comes down to the ballot measure, proponents and opponents of the measure would throw millions of dollars at ad campaigns and muddle the water. Foster maintains that the deliberative process of hearings, committee meetings and discussions could bring forth a less controversial end-product. But, by the same token, Foster said "It's probably going to be a battle to get it through." However, he said it's something that the House district 39, including Nome and much of Norton Sound and the Bering Strait region, supports.

"Let's give this as many opportunities as we can," Foster said. Foster said he's thinking of the future when an influx of activity is coming our way. "I really want to make sure that we have a seat at the table. Down the road, we will see some really big things happening like Shell coming through for oil and gas exploration as well as big ships going through the Bering Strait and that really could affect subsistence," Foster said.

Foster said that opponents of the ACMP would be afraid that locals had veto power, but the ACMP bill as written only gives locals a voice, not veto power, in project developments on state or federal coastal zones. After all, the whole point of the ACMP is to give states the opportunity for input in activities in federal waters, clarified Labolle.

Nome city manager Josie Bahnke welcomed the introduction of the bill in the House and was encouraged that the Legislature thought it was important enough to submit a bill in addition to the initiative. Bahnke said that with the expected onslaught of mining activities resulting from the Discovery Channel's reality show "Bering Sea Gold" and the DNR offshore lease sale, the city still has the opportunity to provide comment through the DNR permitting process. "But they don't have to go through the next level of scrutiny that the ACMP consistency review offered," Bahnke said. Nome had a coastal zone management plan, but with the death of the program, the plan is not enforceable anymore. "We're watching HB 325 very closely," said Bahnke.

Arctic policy: Alaska wants a big dog in the fight

By Sandra L. Medearis

The United States has a firm toe hold on the status as an Arctic nation through Alaska, its northernmost state with shorelines lapped by Arctic waters. Enjoying this strategic position with countries along the Arctic Circle, Alaska wants to ensure its voice is heard, including input from its coastal indigenous villages.

With receding ice and climate warming opening northern waters, stakeholders in the state's economic and cultural future have been attempting to get the state onto the circumpolar stage as a player in Arctic policies with an active role in determining U.S. policies and responding to those that run counter to Alaska's interests and established regional relationships.

The Alaska Legislature formed the Alaska Northern Waters Task Force in 2010 to exert and preserve its influence on northern marine transportation, governance, fisheries, resource development, research and outer continental shelf development. Rep. Reggie Joule heads the panel of which Nome's mayor, Denise Michels is a member. The Task Force held meetings around the state and came out with findings and recommendations this month. Conversations about Alaska were being held in the Canadian arctic, circumpolar arctic countries and in Washington D.C., Joule said.

"One of our goals was to get the Legislature engaged in conversations about the Arctic as opposed to waiting for budgetary items to come forward," Joule said Monday, and thus get communities also involved in the discussions.

Canada already has an Arctic policy, as does Denmark. An Arctic Council is being chaired for two years by Sweden, to be followed by Canada for two years, then the United States. The Arctic Council comprises eight nations—Canada, Finland, Iceland, Norway, Sweden, Russian Federation, United States and Denmark (Greenland and Faroe Islands). It is an intergovernmental forum that addresses issues faced by the Arctic governments and indigenous people of the Arctic.

"For a period of four years, the chair will be handled by North America. By working together with our neighbors to the east we can have some impact on some of the policies and decisions that that body will be looking at," said Joule.

Now to develop the state's position farther, at the request of the ANWTF, the House Finance Committee has introduced HCR 23, a bill for the creation of a 16-member Alaska Arctic Policy Commission. The intent is that the Commission would help Alaska position itself within the national Arctic policy.

The state could use the AAPC to stay in conversations that would affect the state and its communities, Joule said.

"This is certainly very important to those of us around the Nome area," Rep. Neal Foster said. "I want to point out that in the work of the Task Force that has just been concluded was the focus to make sure the people whose backyard is being affected—Kotzebue, Wales, Diomede, people who can actually even see the ships going by—wanting to make sure that the benefits were being shared by people in those communities."

According to testimony from Canadian visitors, Canada already sees itself as an Arctic nation and its part of their national story and their national mystique," Rep. Berta Gardner said. "The United States largely has no awareness of that. It's clearly on our minds here in Alaska, but the rest of the nation is largely asleep on some of the issues that concern us."

Canada has a national policy, and three provinces—Nunavut, Northwest Territories and Yukon have their own Arctic vision, according to Joule

"I think we would do much the same," Joule said.

"Canada's national policy, developed in 2009, was more geared to military and national sovereignty in resource development, whereas NWT Nunavut and Greenland are more about regional cooperation, economically sustainable communities economically sustainable resource development—more regionally based," Christine Hess, Joule's chief of staff said in a House Resources Committee hearing.

Rep. Alan Dick said constituents had concern "this might lead us down a road where we might be sacrificing national sovereignty in joining into some global something or other," he said.

"I guess one of the options is to do nothing," Joule responded. "Where would that take us?

"Alaska, because of its place allows the United States to sit with the Arctic Council among Arctic nations. Would we say that we'll just let the federal government make the decisions and go from there and take their lead," Joule said. "I think our state has a little bit of independence and I believe that our state would also like to be able to influence some of the decisions that are being made at the federal level, but also potentially at the international level. If anything, it would be asserting our sovereignty."

For the most part, the members of the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission would be residents of Alaska, with the exception of a representative of the federal government who might be only stationed in Alaska, as a U.S. Coast Guard representative, for example.

The 16-member Commission would include the following to serve for the life of the panel:

- Three senators appointed by the Senate president (one acting as cochair).
- Three representatives appointed by the House speaker (one acting as
- One member from the executive branch appointed by the governor.
- Nine members appointed jointly by the Senate president and the House speaker representing the federal government; a tribal entity; the mining industry; the oil and gas industry; the University of Alaska; fisheries; a local government; a coastal community; an international Arctic organization.

Unlike the Task Force, the AAPC would include representatives from the oil and gas industry, University of Alaska and tribal members. "This intends to bring more of the stakeholders into shaping this policy," Joule said. One of the most important pieces of the Task Force was the dialog we were able to have with communities when we went out to Wales, when we went out to Unalaska, when we went out to Wainwright"

As designed, the AAPC would develop preliminary policies as a progress report by Jan. 30, 2014 and deliver a final report by Jan. 30, 2015.

With reality setting in after our first official meeting, I realized all the responsibilities I brought on. I have many plans for our unique boxing team and I am determined not to let them down. I also told them we would have to work for everything that we receive and nothing would go unearned.

All of my students so far, into our third week, have shown a great deal of interest with over 15 members. With all the support from the community and my students, it has brought a great deal of optimism to our boxing team's future and we cannot help but to be filled with excitement and happiness.

I, without a doubt, believe that with some hard work, dedication, teamwork and persistence, the sky is the limit for our "Sivuqaq Sweet Science" boxers. We have practice twice a week on Mondays and Wednesdays for an hour and a half each day. In our first practices we were doing mostly basics of boxing to get them started but lately we have been getting into more conditioning practices. We start with stretching for 10 minutes, then we run 10 laps in the gym, then we jump rope for 15 minutes and finally we get into what I have planned for that day doing station workouts and while they're doing stations I pull them out one at a time to do some more one-on-one love with the sport and knew it would be a big part of my life one way or another. After starting at Jill's gym I tried a couple other gyms but the gym I most recently trained at and I consider my home gym right now is Daniel's boxing school in An-

At Daniel's boxing school I gained lots of experience training with many professionals including even a boxer who was in the 2008 Beijing Olympics. Daniel Choi was my trainer and he is a top trainer in the nation having many Golden Glove champs and professionals and amateur boxers training through him. Daniel felt I was experienced enough to help with training new boxers at our gym and had me start teaching.

The equipment we are currently trying to acquire are heavy bags, speed bags, boxing gloves, head gear, mouth guards, hand wraps, better jump ropes, jerseys and shoes. The equipment is mostly what we're fundraising for right now, but we are also trying to plan a trip to bring my more serious students on a trip to Anchorage to train at Daniel's Boxing School for a week and attend a boxing event in Anchorage and also just enjoy the city for a little while.

Anthony Slwooko,15, said that the boxing gives him inspiration. "The boxing program has inspired me to try harder in life and has given me something to look forward to here in Gambell," Slwooko said.

The only thing our team lacks so far is funding which we are seeking through donations and fundraising. Last Sunday, 70 people in Gambell attended a spaghetti fundraiser that brought in $500 for the purchase of gear. I made the first donation by supplying all the food necessary to have our spaghetti feed. I informed my students that we we're going to have to work to earn our equipment and gear as it was not already all available for us. All my students are more then willing to help with fundraising because they understand that we are going to have to earn all our equipment required for experience and growth in boxing.

Ben Apangalook,13, said that coach Robert has inspired him to do better at school and at home. Other kids testified to the effect that the boxing helps them keep focused in school and helped them with selfcontrol.

Nome Boys Drop Second Game of Year in Dillingham

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Nanooks boys basketball team lost only their second game all season this past weekend in Dillingham as they split the two games played on the road. It wasn't just the fact that they lost one and not the other, but the way both games played out was staggering.

In the first game, the Nanook boys dominated the entire game, eventually winning in a convincing fashion, 63-43. Nome, who had three different players score in double figures, had no trouble getting points, scoring at will against Dillingham. Nathan Blandford led the Nanooks, as he has in many games this season with a game high 24 points. Tyler Eide scored 15 points and Jens Irelan added an additional 10.

However, in the second game, it was a completely different story. Nome's defense again allowed Dillingham only to score 43 points. The problem with this game was that Nome themselves only scored 30 points. The Nanooks, who only had

Eide score in double figures with 10 points, shot 29 percent from the floor and committed 16 turnovers, doubling the turnover margin that Dillingham gave up. Blandford and Irelan, who have been consistent double figure scorers all season, came away with 10 points combined in the loss in what was perhaps the worst game played all year by the Nanook boys squad.

Every team has an off night during the season, but the question is worth asking. How can a team that they beat so easily the previous day defeat them the next day so convincingly? Or perhaps a better question being is how their offense can look so effective one day and terrible the

With all of that said, the one thing the Nanooks have been consistent about all season has been their defense. The defense of Nome has been their trademark as a team, which has boosted them to their 18-2 record for the year. It will also be the thing that determines how far Nome can go this

Even with the loss, the Nanooks are a serious contender to make a run in regionals and the state tournament. Before they focus on those tournaments, head coach Pat Callahan and his team have one more regular season weekend coming up against Barrow at the Den of the Mighty Nanooks this weekend. It will also be the time where the seniors will be recognized and awarded for their outstanding years of contribution for the program.

Lady Nanooks Split Games on Senior Weekend

By Stephen Palmatier

The Nome Lady Nanooks were able to split the games played this past weekend against Dillingham at the Den of the Mighty Nanooks. Like many times this year, they fell in the first game but were able to make great adjustments to bounce back with a victory.

In the opening game, the Lady while Dylan Johnson added 14 and Devynn Johnson had 12.

Nanooks fell to Dillingham, 71-65. It was an offensive explosion by both teams, as neither defense was doing a good job containing each other's offense. Devynn Johnson led the scoring for the Lady Nanooks with a game high 34 points in the loss. Dylan Johnson added 17 points as well for Nome, but it was not enough as Nome's man-to-man defense was unable to stop Dillingham for most of the game. Knowing that, the Lady Nanooks made an adjustment for the second game on defense, switching to a 2-3 zone for much of the game. This turned out to be a brilliant adjustment as the ladies were able to win 49-42 behind a great defensive ef-

"Tonight, we went to a 2-3 zone and stopped the penetration and their inside game which forced them to shoot outside," said Don Stiles, head coach of the Lady Nanooks.

The production on offense was much more balanced in this game for the ladies as Nome had three different players in double figures. Shayla Johnson led the way with 15 points, were recognized before the first game for their outstanding contributions they have given to the Nome Lady Nanook program.

"Just watching them grow over the first three years I have worked with them has been the best thing,"

Chloe Mattheis has been the starting center this season and has made a strong contribution, especially in the rebounding department. Kaitlyn Gartung has been the first one off the bench most of the year, giving valuable minutes and production for the Nanooks and Raechel Stiles has been another player who has given great minutes off the bench for the Lady Nanooks all season long.

"I will miss the humor of Chloe and her dedication to stay in shape," said Stiles. "With Kaitlyn, it's her dedication she has had which I hope will rub off on other players, and with Raechel, it is her work ethic that she always shows me every day," said Stiles.

Carry the Cure offers hope and healing along the Iditarod Trail

While mushers race their dog teams 1,000 miles to commemorate the diphtheria epidemic of the 1920's, an organization dedicated to ending the epidemic of depression and suicide in Alaska is preparing to visit communities along the Iditarod Trail. Just as mushers raced to carry the serum to villages in Western Alaska, the Carry the Cure team will race to carry a message of life and hope that saves people from acts of self harm.

Elijah Jack Tinuk Muntean

A team of 12 will visit a different Iditarod checkpoint each day March 6-13: McGrath, Kaltag, Shaktoolik, Golovin, Unalakleet, and Nome. They will present a "committed to life" suicide-prevention school assembly. Each evening, Broken Walls will present a community concert free to the public.

This is the third annual trip the organization has made during the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race. Bill Pagaran is president of Carry the Cure and organizer of the trip.

"Through our multimedia school assembly and our music, stories and proven practices we will give youth reasons to commit to life," Pagaran said, "as well as giving them practical tools to help themselves and others in the time of need."

CTC is chartering two planes to carry 2,400 pounds of sound equipment and 12 people. Their multimedia school assembly and music, stories and activities give youth reasons to commit to life, and give them practical tools to help themselves and others in the time of need. CTC will connect all the people and resources in the community in order to provide a safety net for people who are depressed and/or suicidal.

Carry the Cure, Inc. (CTC) is a non-profit 501(c)3 organization that is committed to giving the youth of Alaska reasons to live, through our many programs, trainings and school assemblies. Since 1996, Carry the Cure has focused its attention on the native youth of Alaska. CTC has visited over 50 communities in Alaska offering suicide prevention, drug-alcohol prevention, familymarriage workshops, as well as cultural encouragement and enrichment programs to help Alaskans commit to

Pilots required to use FAA online system by October 1, 2012

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Air travel is a vital part of life in rural Alaska. The Federal Aviation Administration recognizes that the health of our pilots is critical to flight this reason, pilots are required to undergo reguhealth exams to ensure they are medically safe to operate aircraft.

The process by which pilots apply for a medical exam will change later this year.

Paper applications for medical certificates traditionally completed by pilots in a doctor's office will, vanish as the FAA moves to a paperless online system for tracking the health status of U.S. pilots.

As of October 1, all pilots must use the online FAA MedXpress system to complete electronic application for Airman Medical or Student Pilot certificate.

Once this OCTOR transition occurs, design a t e d Aviation Medical Examiners, doctors who perform health exams for pilots, will no longer be able to complete airman exams or issue medical certificates without a confirmation number issued by the online system.

In the January edition of the Federal Air Surgeon's Medical Bulletin. Fred Tilton, MD, the Federal Air Surgeon explained, "The paper system allows for too many errors, leads to storage problems, and creates security risks."

The transition to an electronic system is projected to save the FAA around $150,000 a year.

The online MedXpress system has been available to pilots since 2007, though the system up until now was optional. Pilots who did not have Internet access or who were unfamiliar with online technology could complete the old paper application in the doctor's office prior to their exam. In fact many pilots preferred the traditional paper form.

The use of paper forms; however, has become largely redundant. Since 1999, when the FAA originally moved to an electronic system, all exams have been converted to an electronic format. Even when a pilot completes the traditional paper form, the entire history and physical exam must be transferred to an electronic form prior to submission to the FAA. This transfer, often performed by clinic staff after the airman exam, frequently leads to unintended errors from poor handwriting, spelling errors, or form omissions. The MedXpress system is designed to ensure the accuracy of the information submitted by each pilot and his or her

A pilot using the MedXpress system receives a confirmation number after completing the online application. This number is then given to an Aviation Medical Examiner who uses the confirmation number to access the airman's medical application, complete the necessary forms, and print a medical certificate.

The MedXpress application is available online at https://MedXpress.faa.gov. Online applications remain active for 60 days after completion. The application is automatically deleted after 60 days if the pilot does not undergo an exam. All information submitted within the FAA website is password protected.

According to Dr. Tilton, the FAA is planning to implement a query system so that pilots can use their online accounts to check the status of an airman certificate.

The FAA is also designing the MedXpress system to automatically transfer information to any new applications, which will make the process easier for professional pilots who undergo regular exams as frequently as every six months.

House Bill 262 would criminalize airport pat-downs

By Sandra L. Medearis

State Rep. Sharon Cissna went through a body scan at Sea-Tac International Airport in Seattle when she was attempting to board a plane back to Juneau and legislature a year ago Monday. The scan showed scars from a mastectomy. Transportation Security Administration policy dictates that inspectors must see or touch prosthetic devices and pat down mastectomy scars

"Facing the agent, I began to remember what my husband and I'd decided after the previous intensive physical search. That I never had to submit to that horror again! It would be difficult, we agreed, but I had the choice to say no, this twisted policy did not have to be the price of flying to Juneau!" Cissna (D-Anchorage) said in an account she gave Alaska Legislature.

Cissna, on the way back from a medical appointment, just said no, and boarded a ferry headed north, traveling also by small airplane and car. Those who have felt the knife edge of flat hand in the crotch and had a stranger's hands trace the underwire line of their bras or had someone touch their "junk" will have interest in a bill that Cissna is currently sponsoring in state Legisla-House Bill 262 that criminalizes actions like TSA's putdowns, seen as invasive by many, and body scans that show a naked picture, sets up another contest between state rights and the federal government.

Over the years, Cissna has been a known champion of the rights of victims of sexual assaults.

Legislators in Texas attempted to pass a similar bill last year. Texas SB 29 would make it it a felony for who "touches the anus, sexual organ, buttocks, or breast of the other person, including touching through clothing." Conviction under the bill came with a $4,000 fine or with a year in jail.

The feds threatened to enforce a 'no fly" zone over Texas. The bill went down in defeat last May.

At a House hearing last week in Juneau, the Alaska bill came under opposition also. Some lawmakers said the pat-downs and scans were necessary to protect form terrorists. Rep. Bob Lynn (R-Anchorage) said Feb. 17 he wanted himself and his family to be safe, and "if someone sees that as an inconvenience, Lynn's lone objection blocked the bill from getting out of House Judicial Committee last week.

Cissna told legislators Feb. 17 that anyone else touching another as happens at airports would be guilty of a

A teleconference scheduled for Monday was cancelled with another teleconference slated for Wednesday. Cissna's bill, HB 262, an act relating to the offense of interfering with access to public buildings or air transportation states:

"A person commits the offense of interference with access to public buildings or transportation facilities if the person, as a condition for access to a public building or transportation facility, requires another person to consent or otherwise sub-

(1) physical contact by any person touching directly or through clothing the genitals, buttocks, or female breast of the person seeking access;

(2) any electronic process that produces an electronic image of the genitals, anus, or female breast or otherwise creates an electronic image of the person seeking access that exposes or reveals a physical characteristic that is normally hidden by clothing and is not normally visible to the public.

There are other means, Cissna said, pointing out that Alaskans fly more often than those in other states and that many living in remote areas have no choice but to go through airport security

From HB 262, "Airports in other countries and states throughout the US have developed procedures that do not use TSA employees. Those airports provide solid security while providing safe, respectful treatment of the flying public. HB 262 calls for unfettered access to our state's public airports. The bill does this by making it a class A misdemeanor for any individual, including TSA employees, to require an individual to submit to an electronic body imager or to direct physical contact before being granted access to a public building or a transportation facility."

HB 262 excludes public buildings as probation offices and correctional institutions.

American Cancer Society implements patient lodging program

American Cancer Society's new 'Patient Lodging Program' aids those traveling for their cancer treatments

- A Kodiak woman undergoing chemotherapy sleeps at the Anchorage International Airport overnight. She makes sure she is close to a bathroom just in case she gets sick.
- For six weeks, a 91-year-old man and his wife of 70 years drive to Anchorage daily from their home on the Kenai Peninsula so he can get his radiation treatment.
- A cancer patient from Kodiak spends $794 for a four-night stay at an Anchorage hotel during the sum-
- A 21-year-old man from Northwestern Alaska travels to Anchorage to attend college, but instead finds that he has leukemia. With no home and no friends or family in the city with the potentially life-saving cancer facilities, his battle is far larger than just his disease.

These are just a few of the many stories of cancer in our state.

A cancer diagnosis can be devastating to any individual. In an instant, a once normal life can be transformed into a series of questions and concerns most never think they will have to face: Is surgery an option?

What treatments are best? And how will I pay the mountain of bills that will surely follow?

Alaska's lack of a road system connecting many parts of the state creates additional barriers to those attempting to seek treatment. On top of paying for medical bills, patients in outlying areas face paying for housing while taking treatments in Anchorage. The financial impact for Alaska's cancer patients can be staggering.

Your local American Cancer Society office works hard to help alleviate these challenges by soliciting contributions from local companies whose generosity has provided air travel, hotel rooms, and gas cards. It is why the American Cancer Society developed its Anchorage Patient Lodging Program for individuals diagnosed with the disease.

The American Cancer Society's Patient Lodging Program offers rooms free of charge for cancer patients and one caregiver who must travel more than 50 miles to the Anchorage area for their treatments, do not have friends or relatives to stay with, and for whom paying for a hotel would be a financial hardship. Currently participating in the American Cancer Society Anchorage Patient Lodging Program are the Anchorage Marriott Downtown, Days Inn, Hampton Inn, Hilton Anchorage, Longhouse Alaskan Hotel and the Westmark Anchorage Hotel.

According to Debbie Jaso, Patient Navigator for the American Cancer Society, the program has been well received since it began last September. In the 4 short months since it started, the six participating hotels had offered nine cancer patients 69 nights of free lodging during their treatments.

"The program is a blessing for cancer patients coming in from across Alaska," says Jaso. She explains that when a cancer patient schedules his or her treatments, they are encouraged to contact their social worker or patient navigator to request a room in one of the participating hotels. Since almost all cancer treatments are performed during the week, the limited number of complementary rooms are only available Monday through Friday on a first come - first serve basis.

For more information about the American Cancer Society Anchorage Patient Lodging Program, call Debbie Jaso at 212-5605.

Obituary

L. Earl Towner

Chaplain (LTC-R) L. Earl Towner, 70, of Barnes, Wisconsin, received final orders from his Commander-in-Chief on February 8, 2012, at St. Luke's Hospital Hospice in Duluth, Minnesota, surrounded by family.

He was born Ludvig Earl Towner on May 28, 1941, in Nome, Alaska, the oldest son of the late L. Earl and Ruth Towner. He was a 1959 graduate of Nome High School; attended North Park College in Chicago, Illinois; enlisted in the U.S. Army from 1963 to 1966; finished his undergraduate degree at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis in order to go into the ministry, and attended Bethel Seminary in St Paul, Minnesota. He served pastorates in Lund, Wisconsin and Worthington, Minnesota until 1979 when he was commissioned as a U.S. Army Chaplain, serving at Ft. Riley, Kansas and Ft. Richardson, Alaska until he retired with 24 years of service in 2001.

Between Christmas and New Years in 1960, he attended the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship Urbana Missions Conference, and met Lynnette Carole Peterson. After three years of dating and writing letters, they married at Zion Covenant Church in Ellsworth, Wisconsin on June 21, 1964.

Chaplain Towner was awarded the Legion of Merit Award, which is the highest award given during peacetime and is approved by the U.S. Congress. He also received the Alaska Legion of Merit Award, approved by the Alaska Legislature; the Alaska Commendation medal: and the Minute Man award for outstanding leadership as the STARC Chaplain for the State of Alaska Army National Guard. Additionally, he received four Community Service Medals and many other commendations. Following his retirement, he worked as the Alaska Veteran's Administration Chaplain helping homeless veterans with substance addic-

In 2002, he was diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota and moved from Anchorage to Barnes, Wisconsin in order to participate in research studies with Mayo Clinic. These visits continued until his death. He was pleased that he was able to contribute to the efforts towards a treatment for Alzheimer's disease.

He was preceded in death by his father, Lawrence Earl Towner; his mother, Ruth Evangeline Ost Towner; and a brother Robert Lincoln Towner who died in infancy.

He is survived by his wife Lynnette "Lynn" Towner of Barnes, Wisconsin and their children: Beth Towner of Barnes; Brett (Kim Anh) Towner of Anchorage; Kaari (Sterling) Bouma of Homer; and Kirk (Jacquelynn) Towner of Anchorage. He is also survived by his brothers: John (Colleen) Towner of Chaska, Minnesota; Joseph "Joe" (Mary) Towner of Cottage Grove, Minnesota; James "Jim" (Martha) Towner of Sauk Center, Minnesota; and one sister, Ruth "Kathy" Burton of Kenai. He will be dearly missed by his grandchildren: Michael, Konnie, Lander, Heighlan, Walker, Jessica, Neil, and Kaitlynn, as well as a host of nieces and nephews.

A celebration of Earl's life was held on Saturday, February 11 at Barnes Community Church.

No single factor is responsible for this catastrophic failure of our local educational system. A successful solution must be as multi-faceted as the problem it is addressing. By presenting the data frankly and honestly in a public forum, Mr. Brawner has taken an essential first step toward a real solution to the problem—he has asked us for our ideas and support. It is now up to us—the community—to respond.

Dear Editor,

The letters written about the Seaside Center by former center Director Mr. Davin Anderson and Nome resident John Smith in previous Nome Nugget issues about the center's misconduct are spot on. Mr. Smith's description of the indecent and verbal abuse by security staff continues to this day. There are apparent and intentional violations of prisoner/ resident health and well-

We would like to tell the people of Nome what is really going on at their Seaside Center but we can expect staff here to retaliate against us for talking publicly about their deviousness. This will be construed as a form of "Unauthorized Communication with the Public," an Alaska Department of Corrections infraction. Half the rules at the center are not in the handbook (written by a different company Cornell Corrections, revised 1999) and new ones are made each week to accommodate making the staff's job easier, to save on money for Geo Care Inc., and satisfy the Chief of Security's desire for power. The Chief of Security has imposed a new rule that working furlough based on the fact that they smelled like a cigarette!

Although Geo Care Inc. has an approved meal menu (by NSHC's Pat Owens) they continuously cut the portions, ingredients, and quality of the food. The meals served at the center are cut to save on the budget. For instance, the approved menu will have lettuce and tomato as part of the "burger meal" menu item but when it comes time for preparation they don't give them. There hasn't been a meal that followed approved menu ingredients in months. Residents are deprived of proper nutrition. The food provided through the vending machines has zero nutritional value and is not fit for diabetics who have no choice but to buy it because they are hungry.

All of the work furloughs have also mentioned that their lunch meals are unreasonably small. They pay for their cost of care by having the state take 25 percent of their gross wages. Yet they receive left-over food or skimpy sandwiches day in and day out. It has even been mentioned by staff members (humorously) that residents' admit photos show that all have been losing weight. Yet when staff is fed they receive twice as much food as the res-

New rules set by staff don't allow for anyone to bring in food items or order out. Their logic behind this is that someone might try to import contraband into the center. But it really is a ploy for a money making scheme. They have two vending machines that they fill with everything from candy and soda to coffee. They buy the items and fill it up a couple times a week. The weekly draw money issued to residents circulates (the money had been marked by residents) within the facility for months with the profits being skimmed off the top. Ramen noodles for $1.00 a piece! We believe they re starving us to insure that there will be a demand for vending machine food.

The center continuously runs out of hand soap and paper towels for as long as two to three weeks at a time. Residents who are sick are told that they are faking it and that they can manage. That if the illness continues they can fill out a medical form to be seen by AMCC Medical. This takes about a week to get processed.

The building doesn't comply with living conditions standards. The facility director has gone as far as having his church donate bunk beds to increase the capacity to bring in more money. When asked why they chose to bypass donating the beds to needy families but rather give the beds to a for-profit company the LDS members said, "We were told too." The windows have heavy duty screens bolted down and the levers have been removed to keep anyone from opening them regardless of an emergency.

I know it is hard for a lot of folks to sympathize with us but remember we are humans too. We have families who care for us and as Christians you should too. We are in a halfway house (community orientated and minimum security risk) after all. We are being treated like lower class citizens. Someone needs to look into these claims. At least make a call to the Ombudsman or your legislative representative's office. They will not be unfounded.

Grant (ESG) and the HOME Investment Partnerships Program (HOME).

The Plan Draft includes general principles and pri-orities for use of these funds; description of the lead entity responsible for the Plan; cilizen participation/consultation; housing needs assessment for the homeless, specific income groups, special needs groups, and lead-based paint hazards; housing market analysis including homeless facilities, special needs facilities and services, and barriers to fair housing. It also provides a strategy for meeting the identified needs, addressing bar-riers to fair housing and lead-based paint hazards; non-housing community development plan; antipoverty strategy; analysis of institutional structure and its coordination; public housing resident initiatives; and low-income housing tax credit use.

The SFY2013 Annual Action Plan is the third an nual implementation of the current 5-Year Plan. The draft specifically details how CDBG, ESG and HOME annual funding allocations will be used to carry out the strategy of the HCD Plan. It includes information on state programs that en-hance these HUD programs.

On November 15, 2011, the Department of Housing and Community Development (HUD) announced the interim regulations and amounts of the second allocation of FFY 2011 ESG for the areas of the state outside of Anchorage, effective January 4, 2012. Under this allocation, the State of Alaska would receive $71,301 for the areas of the State excluding Anchorage

To receive funds from the second allocation, the State of Alaska must prepare, and obtain HUD approval of a Substantial Amendment to its Fiscal Year (SFY) 2012 Annual Action Plan. The draft Substantial Amendment presented for public comment includes summaries of the consultation and the citizen participation processes; information on match amounts, proposed activities, overall budget, funding priorities; discussions of stan-dards for assistance, standard policies and procedures for evaluating eligibility and for coordination among providers. It highlights the relevant changes under the Interim Rule, and provides guidance on critical decisions to be made in

The ESG program is designed to identify sheltered and unsheltered homeless persons, as well as those at risk of homelessness, and provide the services necessary to help those persons quickly regain stability in permanent housing after experiencing a housing crisis and/or

BOTH the SFY2013 Annual Action Plan (draft) AND the ESG Substantial Amendment to the SFY2012 Annual Action Plan (draft) will be available for public comment from February 17, 2012 to the close of business (5:00 p.m. Alaska time) on March 20, 2012.

Foster's Report

By Rep. Neal Foster House District 39 Greetings from Juneau!

We are into the fourth week of the legislative session, and things are in full swing. Along with attending House Floor Session, I am still Co-Chair of the House Special Committee on Energy, on the House Resources Committee, the House Community and Regional Affairs Committee, the House Finance Transportation Subcommittee, and the House Finance Public- Safety Subcommittee.

We have had several visitors from the House District and from other regions of the State. I would like to thank all of the people who have stopped by to say hello and discuss their needs and priorities.

Things are moving rapidly. Community requests for Capital Projects funding have been entered into the CAPSIS system where they can be reviewed and edited before being finalized for review by the House and Senate Finance Committees. Finance Subcommittees for the Operating Budget are currently meeting and should conclude their work within the month. If you have questions regarding either budget please contact my Juneau office.

National Park Service

U.S. Department of the Interior

National Park Service (NPS) is considering establishing 18 fenced grazing exclosures to study lichen growth rates and ungulate (caribou, reindeer, muskox) grazing effects in Bering Land Bridge National Preserve (BELA), Alaska starting in the summer of 2012. Each exclosure fence would be 30 ft x 30 ft, 6 ft high, established for 30- 50 years, and accessed by helicopter for both construction and regular readings of vegetation plots. Reading of vegetation plots would be conducted once every 10 years. The project area is eligible for wilderness but is not designated as wilderness. The two primary purposes of the proposal are 1) to provide data for a scientifically-based reindeer grazing management plan, and 2) to provide long-term data on caribou habitat quality and forage quantity for the Western Arctic Caribou Herd's winter range in BELA. A secondary objective of this 2nd purpose is to provide long-term data on climate-driven vegetation change in the absence of grazing.

To determine whether this project meets applicable environmental requirements, NPS has drafted an Environmental Assessment (EA). This EA is now available for public comment from February 7, 2012 until March 7, 2012. The EA is available online at:

http://parkplanning.nps.gov/projectHome.cfm?projectID=32156. The document is approximately 880 kb.

Alternately, hard copies may be obtained upon request to Jeanette Pomrenke (Jeanette_Pomrenke@nps.gov or 907-443-6101).

There are several ways to send public comments:

- 1. The preferred mechanism is via the website above.
- 2. Comments may be made by email or mail to: Jeanette Pomrenke (Jeanette_Pomrenke@nps.gov, National Park Service, PO Box 220, Nome, AK 99762).
- 3. Comments may also be delivered to the NPS office in Nome in person (Sitnasauk Building, Front Street, Nome, Alaska), or faxed to 907-443-6139.

dealing with Coastal Zone Management has been certified by the Lt. Governor and the Division of Elections. So it is headed for a vote in the 2012 election. If the legislature passes a bill that is substantially similar the initiative will not appear on the ballot. A Joint House and Senate Judiciary committee held a hearing on the issues. The biggest take away from the meeting was that the larger and more complex an initiative is, the more leeway courts would give the legislature in clearing the substantially similar bar. The flip side is that there is no litmus test that can be applied to legislation. In order to "test" whether or not language meets this requirement it would have to become law and go before the court (if challenged). aid=JJUD120206A&type=audio House Joint Resolution No. 34

This Resolution asks the U.S. Congress to fund the facilities and vessels that will be necessary if the U.S. Coast Guard is to fulfill its mission in the Arctic. This will require additional vessels with icebreaking capability and an Arctic Coast Guard Base. As the Arctic is opened up to more shipping and mineral exploration there will be an increased need for Coast Guard support in that

House Concurrent Resolution 23

This Resolution also speaks to the anticipated expansion of activities in the Arctic related to mineral extraction, oil and gas development, fisheries, tourism and marine shipping. It establishes the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission which will consist of 16 members selected from various interest groups that are involved in, or who are affected by, increased Arctic development. The Commission will be comprised of three Senators, three House Members, a Federal Government representative, a Tribal entity representative, a mining industry representative, a gas and oil representative, a University of Alaska representative, a fisheries representative, a local government representative, a coastal community representative, an international Arctic organization representative and one member representing the state appointed by the Governor.

House District #39 Redistricting

The Superior Court has declared that the Legislative Redistricting for House Districts 1&2 and House Districts 37 & 38 are not constitutional. The Redistricting Board has decided not to appeal House Districts I & 2 but will appeal the House Districts 37 & 38 portion of the decision to the State Supreme Court. While there was considerable interest in the Superior Courts' findings, not much has really changed. The changes in Districts 1&2 will be minor and aren't likely to effect the overall look of the map and Districts 37 and 38 were going to be decided by the Supreme Court regardless of the lower court's decision. The Supreme Court's decision on 37 and 38 is expected to determine the fate of the entire map. The general consensus is that if either district is ruled unconstitutional, the entire map will have to be redrawn.

My office is available to answer questions or to help with issues related to the state.

Alaska National Guardsmen conduct exercise in Point Hope

By Major Guy Hayes

More than 30 Alaska Army National Guard members traveled to Point Hope Feb. 11 to conduct a joint exercise supporting the North Slope Borough. The exercise tested the North Slope emergency response system and provided Guard members the opportunity to train with other local, state and federal agencies while simulating evacuation and search and rescue missions. "Point Hope was exercising evacuation and emergency sheltering of citizens," said Capt. Doug Smith, A Troop commander, 1-297th Reconnaissance and Surveillance, Alaska Army National Guard. "We were called in to support the community by providing Defense Support to Civil Authorities."

According to Smith, DSCA is critical to fostering relationships and being prepared for real world emergencies. He sent his executive officer, 1st Lt. Chris Dailey, to Point Hope ahead of time to plan for the arrival of the main body of Soldiers, while he traveled to Barrow to coordinate the response.

"I flew to Barrow and met with the city manager. We talked about the exercise and then we formulated a plan, which I sent to Dailey," Smith said. "Dailey ensured we supported the community, taking direction from North Slope emergency response coordinator, Frederick Brower, on where they needed our assistance. Dailey's leadership and planning were critical to our success during this exercise."

Receiving the call to support DSCA operations, A Troop soldiers loaded their gear and boarded a Wyoming Air National Guard C-130 in Anchorage with other members from the State of Alaska Department of Military and Veterans Affairs. Stopping in Fairbanks to pick up additional soldiers and equipment, they arrived in Point Hope ready to participate in the exercise. Focused on evacuation response, the Guard members were also tested in search and rescue operations when a lost hunter was reported as an exercise

"Each citizen carries an avalanche beacon when they are conducting activities outside of the village. When there's an incident the beacon sends out a signal, which is reported to the North Slope Borough emergency managers in Barrow," Smith said. "When the North Slope Borough received that signal, we supported the exercise by initializing rescue operations." Reflecting on A Troop's ability to support DSCA operations, Smith is happy with the results of the exercise and is even more pleased with the diligence of his soldiers who performed exceptional leading up to and during the exercise. "There is a lot of planning that goes in to an exercise like this," Smith said. "Sgt. 1st Class Jeff Alberts and Staff Sgt. Khris White were critical to this mission. We would have never accomplished this much if these two didn't coordinate all the behind the scenes efforts in aircraft and logistical support. They were phenomenal, and I'm very pleased with the effort everyone put in during this exercise.'

BBB: Email phishing scam surfaces again

Another round of counterfeit BBB complaint notice emails target businesses

The scam that fraudulently uses Better Business Bureau's name will not die. Reports indicate that businesses are again receiving emails from impostors claiming to represent BBB. Senders state that complaints have been filed and that recipients must click on enclosed links or provide other personal information to address the complaints.

This is a scam. The enclosed links may contain viruses and malware that could damage computers and place identities at risk.

Scan BBB emails for typos; obvious grammatical errors are an indication that emails are counterfeit.

Check the senders' email addresses; complaint notices are generated by local BBBs and not from the Council of Better Business Bureaus—or CBBB.

Hover the mouse cursor over enclosed links; beware if Web addresses do not reflect bbb.org.

Tip: Copy and paste enclosed links directly into text editors that do not support HTML—such as Notepad—and the direct links will be shown.

Better Business Bureau serving Alaska, Oregon and Western Washington reminds businesses that—while BBB does send complaint notices by mail, email and fax—the best way to verify the legitimacy of any official-looking correspondence is to immediately contact the local BBB office.

Report scams at bbb.org/scam/report-a-scam and forward suspicious emails to phishing@council.bbb.org.

WRENCH TIME — Nome's Tre West and his partner Tyler Huntington of Fairbanks are on the clock in the Nome Public Works garage fixing their Polaris Switchback sleds during the 36-hour mandatory layover at the Iron Dog halfway point in Nome. Each team was allowed 20 minutes to inspect their sleds off the clock. Actual repairs happen "on the clock," timed by the second and calculated into the team's actual run time. Tre West and Huntington finished in second place.

McKenna, VanMeter take Iron Dog Race

able to hold off 20 other teams of riders to claim snowmachinie racing's ultimate prize.

With a total course riding time of 1 day, 11 hours, 39 minutes and 56 seconds, they were able to defeat the second place team of Tyler Huntington and Tre West on Polaris Pro R Switchback 600 cc by nearly 44 minutes.

McKenna, who is from Anchorage, is now a three-time champion of the race, winning it back in 2005 and 2008. VanMeter, who is from Kasilof, had run the race every year except once since 1994 and is now a four-time champion of the event.

Over the course of the race, the riders lay over in 7 different places, including for more than a day at the halfway point in Nome. In Nome and other layovers, the riders would be on the clock to work on their machines and find what problems there

For some people, the Iron Dog is a very big event, especially for family members.

"I've been flying to different places following the race," said Dan Morgan, who is Mike Morgan's father

Rounding out the rest of the top 5 for the race were Ryan Sottosanti and Andrew Zwink in third place on Polaris Pro R Rush 600 cc , Mike Morgan and Chris Olds in fourth place on Polaris Pro R S Switchback 600 cc and Todd Palin and Scott Davis on Arctic Cat Sno Pro 600 cc in fifth.

Council toughens port regs and fees

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council should have called out the Public Works Department with a blade to plow through a heavy agenda Monday night at its regular meeting. Still, the Council finished in two hours.

With Councilwoman Mary Knodel pulling the towrope, the panel got through the Port of Nome tariff revision. Knodel apparently had been through the document with a magnifying glass and proposed amendments to it to tighten regulations in advance of the onslaught of gold miners expected to grace and otherwise occupy the underwater golden beaches of Nome.

The City of Nome and state agencies are trying to prepare for an onslaught of gold miners who for the most part will have nowhere to stay and nowhere to mine legally.

Port of Nome Tariff 8, on the workbench at Nome Port Commission, for several months tightens regs and ups some user fees, but requirements were not stringent enough to suit Knodel. The Council approved all the amendments proposed.

The Council pulled back to only one allowable breach some infractions that the originally proposed tar-

Environmental Conference brings together regional delegates to discuss issues

Regional watershed alliance proposed for Norton Sound/Bering Strait region

By Diana Haecker

Regional delegates from Norton Sound and Bering Strait communities converged on Nome last week to meet for three days to discuss topics that ran the gamut of environmental concerns. Solid waste and recycling, climate change and adaptation, mining impacts and watershed protection, proposed outer continental shelf oil and gas development and the protection of the subsistence lifestyle were some of the issues discussed.

A comparable region-wide conference on environmental issues has not been held since 2004. The 2012 Bering Strait/Norton Sound Environmental Conference organizer Kevin Zweifel with Norton Sound Health Corporation's Office of Environmental Health said that the goal was to create awareness about environmental issues that impact the region and Alaska. "In addition we wanted to create awareness and develop some proactive movement to address some specific issues," Zweifel said.

Regional Watershed initiative proposed

Zweifel re-introduced the idea of forming a regional watershed alliance that would incorporate waters flowing into Norton Sound and the Bering Strait. A working group has been drafting a resolution in 2010, but for the lack of funding to see the initiative through, the concept remained dormant until Zweifel brought it up again at last week's conference. The resolution -in its first draft phase- says that the BS/NS Watershed Alliance seeks to promote watershed integrity through education, research, and communication while encouraging sustainable use and development of the watershed resources. It goes on to say that there are considered ads.

Dear Friends,

We've had some big news lately, time to pass some on, starting with the best. My boy Andy is marrying his longtime girlfriend Danielle Robarge this October. At age 31 Andy is tying the knot with a young lady that Janice and I absolutely adore.

She hails from upstate New York, has two kids, Josh and Aster from a previous marriage, and has worked as a computer specialist for the University of Georgia for several years. You may have already heard the news via Facebook. We are thrilled with this coming union. They plan to remain in Athens for the time being, as Andy is getting lots of work in the film industry in Georgia. During these lean economic times, Andy finds himself steadily employed. You may see him regularly on AMC's The Walking Dead, doing stunt work for the zombies.

And now some tragic news: Guy Smith, my sister Peg's beloved husband, has just died in Dumfries, VA, at age 68, after a long illness. Guy and Peggy first met at the Rock Creek Stables in Washington DC during the 1960s. They fell in love with horses and, very quickly, each other, marrying in 1967. Guy left for Vietnam, where he flew a Huev gunship, experienced much combat, and fortunately, survived the war. Upon his return, he and Peg, had their daughter, Samantha, and bought a 25-acre horse farm in Stafford, VA. More than any Rusk I know, Peg and Guy found their bliss- horses- and followed it throughout their lives. Guy was a bit reticent with me as a brother-in-law, but he was a terrific husband to Peg and father to Sammy, and in my own way, I deeply loved and respected him. I'll always remember Guy riding that Pinto of his, Navajo, with cowboy hat and lariat. He was nearly killed in a motorcycle accident ten years ago, but somehow recovered and got back on his Harley and his horses. He was a real tough dude, and we will miss him greatly. And finally, after 65 years of near-perfect health, I hit a big piece of kryptonite. Hip replacement surgery

I'd like to say that I'm overjoyed to learn about all the support we have for SB 130, establishing an Alaska Native Language Preservation & Advisory Council. We have received overwhelming support statewide for this effort and I'm very thankful to all the organizations that have sent letters of support and resolutions for the passage of this particular bill. This bill is one of the first to establish service solely for Alaska Natives at the state level and touches on the very foundation of culture. This bill has been heard in both Senate State Affairs and the Senate Finance Committees. It passed with unanimous support in the State Affairs committee and the Senate Finance Committee will vote on this bill in the near future. Here is a link to a news story aired on KTVA for your pleasure. The House Companion bill, HB 254, has past the House State Affairs and will be heard before the House Finance Committee

Icebreaking News

I along with Representative Bob Herron submitted House Joint Resolution 24 urging the US Congress to fund all the facilities and vessels necessary for the United States Coast Guard to fulfill its Arctic Missions, including ice breakers and an Arctic Coast Guard. The need for fuel delivery to Nome this winter brought this matter forward and presented the long overdue need to such icebreakers and other needed facilities when crises such as this happen affecting our coastal communities.

Up Pops the Devil

Just when we were groaning with the ho-hum Republican presidential candidates debates, the damnedest thing happened - the Devil entered the picture with his eyes on America. How does a rational person take this as serious politics? Oh well, we all know the Devil is in the details.

While we try to survive the too-long series of Republican primary candidates' mud-slinging events we have a chance to keep an eye on the goings on in Juneau. Will our politicians ever gather the courage to effectively tax the companies who are making big bucks by selling our oil? Will we see legislation that promotes openness in government and meaningful and timely communication with the public? Will we see a willingness to let folks who are impacted by legislation be made aware of the changes? Is State government to expect the unsuspecting citizen to wade through a labyrinth of on-line government web pages and industry newsletters to find out about changes in legislation that impact our lives? We also need openness in city government, but that will only happen when the public insists on being kept informed. Proposed legislation and ordinances should be published in newspapers of general circulation.

Maybe Old Nick is stirring the pot. Can we expect our politicians to steal a line from comedian Flip Wilson's Geraldine and proclaim in a high falsetto, "The devil made me do it!" - N.L.M.-

Read bulletin boards without a dictionary

By Sandra L. Medearis

A bill in Legislature would make language clearer and increase information in official notices of new, changed or repeals of state agency regulations.

HB 216 would require notices of changes in regulations to have an explanation in good plain English that tells what the former regulation said that is to be applied, repealed or changed.

Confusion "is caused by the legalese used to describe proposed regulations. This language, while accurately and legally describing proposed regulations, is difficult to understand by the average individual," sponsor Rep. Peggy Wilson R-Anchorage, said.

The bill itself states that brief descriptions "shall be written in clear, easily readable language that a person without a legal background is able to understand."

The new law would broaden public participation in the review process, Wilson hoped, as the people would understand what the change in regulation meant to them, she said.

However, in House Finance Committee the bill underwent a tweaking that produced a substitute bill that would provide the description in notices appearing in the newspapers, broadcasts or trade journals only for regulations from Board of Fish, Board of Game, and the state Regulatory Commission. Other changes in regulations from other agencies would not be included in print and broadcast notices to save money.

The public would be able to read the "plain English" descriptions of changes to some rules and regulations in e-mails mailed notices and online, Wilson said, favoring the change. Publishing in print "costs money, as print notices cost by the

That language clips the wings of a good bill, Rep. Mark Neuman, R-Wasilla, said in committee.

"If the intent is to keep the public informed, you are backing out of that," he said. "It's taking back some information it's supposed to be giving the public. You should describe the changes in those three [newspapers, broadcasts and trade journals]."

Wilson said she was trying to enhance the bill's chances of passage by decreasing the cost.

"We've got the other body to get through. If I think it will get through, I will change it," she said.

The move raises the question of Internet availability in rural Alaska and shuts three portals of information to the public.

However, HB 216 would also require an agency to state a date in the accompanying fiscal note for the change to take effect. If they could not meet the deadline stated, an agency would have to publish a new effective date. The agencies under this fiscal note provision are the following: Alaska Housing Finance Corporation, the Alaska Industrial Development and Export Authority, the Alaska Energy Authority, the Alaska Public Offices Commission, and the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission, but does not include other boards or commissions.

"Legislators and the public have often been frustrated by the fact that months, or even years, sometimes pass between the time that a bill is passed by the legislature and the time the regulation is implemented," Wilson said in a sponsor statement. "The result is; Alaska residents, businesses and legislators are confused about what the change means."

Last week House Finance Committee passed the bill on to House Rules to put the measure on the calendar. Rep. Mia Costello and Rep. Bob Lynn, both R-Anchorage, have joined Wilson as sponsors.

Overdue snowmachiners found near Topkok

A group of three snowmachiners traveling from White Mountain to Nome were found alive, but hypothermic on Monday morning near Topkok, Alaska State Troopers say.

The snowmachiners are William Gray, Sr., 47, William Gray, Jr., 22, and Yorise Olson, 23. According to Troopers, they left White Mountain on Sunday around 5 p.m. but didn't show up in Nome that night. Bad weather held up progress of their trip the group activated the S.O.S. feature on their SPOT device on Sunday night. Troopers say they were reported overdue on Sunday night at Ground searchers left White Mountain but had to turn around due to a severe ground blizzard raging through the region. Conditions were such that wind gusts up to 60 mph and blowing snow created zero visibility and the wind chill neared -

Search and rescue volunteers from Nome set out for a ground search on Monday morning. Trooper Aileen Witrosky said that six searchers on snowmachines were deployed from Nome. Witrosky said that the snowmachiners met up with searchers near the Topkok shelter cabin on Monday at 11 a.m.

Witrosky said that the snowmachiners were hypothermic but otherwise uninjured and alert. They were flown with the National Air Guard's Black Hawk helicopter from Topkok to Nome and were transported to the Norton Sound Regional hospital in Nome for treatment.

iff revision allowed to happen twice before a port user would be kicked off the docks and out of the inner and outer harbor waters.

These were one release of hazardous materials, one incidence of damage to port property or infrastructure, one involvement in an altercation or dispute with another port user that results requiring police assistance, one occasion of violating of tariff rules and regulations.

"Especially with what is coming this year [gold miners], if they get to fighting, they need to be gone," Knodel said. "We need to say, 'This is our port.' We need to keep it safe."

The Port Commission, after discussing the infractions at length thought it should be two violations, according to Joy Baker, harbormaster, who attended by telephone.

"One issue, write them up with a warning. On the second, kick them. If you kick them the first time they will be trying to operate from Belmont Beach, Cape Nome or Safety Sound," she said. We need to set high standards," Councilwoman Stiles said.

The Council approved the amendments, including a delinquency of account for 60 days instead of 90 days. Knodel wanted 45 days—not practical, said Baker, because the Port's largest revenue accounts pay as a rule after around 60 days.

Additionally, a vessel could be declared abandoned after five days, not 10

"We don't have room for junk to sit," Knodel declared.

Following approval of these and other amendments, the Council unanimously approved the tariff revision that also bars leaving boats anywhere in the Port of Nome to freeze in for the winter.

The public may see the tariff at City Hall, online, or soon be able to have a copy with a map of Port of Nome properties attached. Councilman Stan Andersen thanked Knodel for doing the Council's homework on the tariff revision.

Some mercy for locals came out of the session. Subsistence hunters, sports fishers and subsistence fishers may launch their boats at Belmont Beach for free. However, the part of the beach that was reserved for dredgers and boat launches will not be expanded, a suggestion made by Joy Baker, harbormaster, who told the Council that the portion reserved for swimmers was underused during summer 2011. The Council adopted a wait-and-see stance on that question, pending a review of use at Belmont Beach by swimmers and rod-and-reel fishers this summer. Under-use last summer could have resulted from the crappy weather, they said. The boat operators at Belmont Point will be held to the same laws about releasing hazardous material into the water.

In other Port of Nome business, the Council commended Mayor Denise Michels for getting $50 million into the Senate Transportation Committee's SB 163 for extension of the causeway. Letters of support in the Council packet from Bering Straits Native Corp., Nome Eskimo Community and Sitnasuak Native Corp. backed the deed, as did Nome Chamber of Commerce.

"The City of Nome and SNC are united as one, advocating for infrastructure that will spur economic development and lower cost of living," said the letter from Sitnasuak over the signature of President Charles W. Fagerstrom.

The original bill had zip money in it for Nome, according to Michels. An amendment provided the possibility of $50,000 to Kotzebue for deep port construction at Cape Blossom and another amendment would allow $50,000 for the Port of Nome. A letter from Gail R. Schubert, president and CEO of Bering Straits Native Corp. noted that BSNC applied for property at Port Clarence/Port Spencer in 1976 under Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, an area of refuge for hundreds of years.

The bond bill, requested by Gov.

Sean Parnell and approved by Legislature would go before voters at the next general election.

"I want to thank the regional partners for putting our differences aside and working towards common goals where we will all benefit," Michels said in her mayor's report to the Council. Michels expected to testify for the bill Tuesday. She credited work with Baker, City employee Candace Weidler, lobbyist Wendy Chamberlain and John Handeland with lawmakers Donny Olson and Neal Foster in getting the cause before the Senate Transportation Committee.

In other business, the Council:

- Passed a resolution officially honoring a former City employee by giving Nome Bypass a new name: Greg Kruschek Avenue—in "honor, remembrance and recognition of his 16 years of "remarkable service to the citizens of Nome." Councilman Stan Andersen secured an amendment to change the language from Greg Kruschek Bypass to Avenue. "'Bypass' doesn't do it, he said.
- Joined Nome Public Schools in honoring Kogoayah Kozga Librarian Marguerite La Riviere with a Partner in Education Award. John Handeland, member of the Museum and Library Commission recited for the Council a yard-long list of La Riviere's accomplishments and efforts on behalf of young readers. "Our public library is such an important resource in our community and Marguerite's dedication to literacy shows, Nome School Board Member Betsy Wade said in her nominating letter.
- Agreed to meet with City Manager Josie Bahnke to go over issues including staffing updates and the impending gold rush of dreamers with no place to mine and no place to

- Adopted an ordinance amendment upping the impound fee for second impound of an animal running at large—$50, $75, and $300 the third time— and imposed fines on the owner of an animal that cannot be caught—$50, $75 and $300.
- Increased the number of people on the Museum and Library Commission to nine members and declared five a quorum for meetings.
- Received a report from John Handeland, utilities manager, that the Legislature was considering raising the Power Cost Equalization assistance to apply to 700 kw monthly usage from 500 kw and to include commercial accounts. "We asked for 750; they said 700. It's a start," he said. "I think they are starting to notice what is happening."

Finally, the Council moved into executive session to discuss financial matters as regards "delivery of fuel to Bonanza Fuel," concerning the Russian tanker delivery. Bonanza is owned by Sitnasuak Native Corp. Michels and Bahnke are Sitnasuak Native Corp shareholders. The Nome Nugget has asked under state and federal open records laws how much the City's participation required from public coffers and a copy of invoices to Bonanza Fuel for Port use. Additionally, The Nugget has asked for clarification of relationships and interests City employees and officials have in Sitnasuak or Bonanza that pose a potential conflict of interest. Bahnke and Michels are among 2,652 shareholders of SNC.

Andersen assured that there would be no action by the Council following executive session.

Nome eyes state bond money for causeway expansion

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council Monday evening applauded efforts by Mayor Denise Michels to get $50 million for the Port of Nome into a Senate obligation bond bill. SB 163 holds a plan to sell bonds to the tune of $400 million to provide port and harbor projects if approved by statewide voters at the next election. The bill, setting up the "2012 port project fund," originally would have provided $200 million for the Port of Anchorage, $110 million for the Port Mackenzie rail expansion, and $10 million each for projects in Seward, Bristol Bay, Emmonak and Ketchikan, but had no money for Nome or Kotzebue. A committee substitute came through with $50 million toward a deep water port at Cape Blossom near Kotzebue.

The Senate Rules Committee sponsored the bill at request of Gov. Sean Parnell.

"The original bill had nothing in it for Nome," Michels told the Council at its regular meeting Feb. 27. She sought and fought to get a foot into the door for Nome.

A second revamping put $50 million into SB 163 for Nome. This money is separate from money on Nome's Legislative priority list for repairs and harbor upgrades.

Three Native organizations based in Nome—Bering Straits, Sitnasuak and Nome Eskimo Community—have sent letters of support to the Legislature, urging passage to advance regional economic development

Letters of support in the Council packet from Nome Chamber of Commerce, Bering Straits Native Corp., Nome Eskimo Community and Sitnasuak Native Corp. backed the deed.

"The City of Nome and SNC are united as one, advocating for infrastructure that will spur economic development and lower cost of living," said the letter from Sitnasuak over the signature of President Charles W. Fagerstrom.

A letter from Gail R. Schubert, president and CEO of Bering Straits Native Corp. notes that BSNC applied for property at Port Clarence/Port Spencer in 1976 under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act. The area has the only deep water port on the Alaska coast between the mouth of the Yukon River and Canada's border. Port Clarence is located on Cape Spencer, near Teller. Cape Blossom, named by Captain Frederick William Beechey in 1826 after his vessel, HMS Blossom, is farther north. It lies 10 miles down a road that still has to be built going south from Kotzebue. The ultimate regional benefit would depend on the level of integration of facilities on the Arctic coast, according to Schubert.

"The importance of this safe harbor and the property at Point Spencer is well known to maritime operations and has been used by large vessels since the beginning of commercial whaling in the mid-19th century," Schubert said in her letter to the Senate Finance Committee.

Voters statewide hold the cause-way and other ports' improvements in their hands. The bond sale requires approval at the next general election. The measure anticipates debt service of $28 million annually starting in 2017 at an interest rate of 2.61 percent.

February's report to Legislature from the Alaska Northern Waters Task Force of which Michels is a member suggests expanding the Nome causeway at Nome's medium draft port, improving the Nome Teller Road and developing a seasonal deep-draft port at Port Clarence near Teller.

Extension of the causeway would not only create jobs and help the economy but set the stage for other economic opportunity for Nome Eskimo Community's 2,800 tribal members and for the residents of Nome, Denise Barengo, executive director, said.

currently is no regional forum to determine the conditions of the individual watersheds and that the people of the region depend on subsistence hunting and fishing as a year-round source of food, cultural enrichment and personal health. The alliance would develop by-laws and a strategic plan, pursue funding and members are encouraged to pursue separate, more localized watershed projects. Zweifel said the focus of such an alliance would be to gather baseline data on rivers, streams and creeks. "We're fortunate for the most part to live in an environment with pristine waters, but that's not to say that it will always be this way. If we have information that shows what is currently the base line, and if things then begin to change, we have the data that shows that something is going on," Zweifel said.

Zweifel added that the focus would be to protect waters and to give locals a collective voice. "This is not meant to be anti-development, but to advocate for responsible development. People just want to be involved," Zweifel added. "From here on we plan to move forward with a working meeting to establish what this alliance would look like, who the members will be and what its structure and function would be," said Zweifel. "The goal is to collect information and share that information so that ultimately we can protect the watersheds." The present delegates at the conference voiced support for the regional watershed alliance initiative.

The conference highlighted some of the actions taken by other communities to protect their watersheds. In Norton Sound alone, there are two watershed entities that formed to protect the waters flowing into the ocean, the Golovin Bay Watershed Alliance and the Norton Bay Watershed Council. Faced with realities of climate change and the prospect of the development of a uranium mine north of Elim, residents have formed the Norton Bay watershed council to protect the Tubutulik River waters and ultimately subsistence resources and human health. Harold Sheperd, a consultant from the Kenai Peninsula, presented a talk on how Elim plans to collect data through an in stream flow protection project. Youth from Koyuk presented their recycling efforts and initiatives to not only get their peers and parents to recycle, but better yet, reduce the use of plastic wares. Chelsea Fagerstrom told the audience that her group collects plastic bags and other plastics to bury them rather than put them in the village's incinerator. Plastic and paper burned together, she explained, creates Agent Orange and who wants to breathe that?

Local OCS concerns

Richard Kuzuguk of Shishmaref held a power point presentation on his research that he conducted regarding offshore oil and gas development. Kuzuguk said that even though his six children are fond of store-bought food, they still like to dunk their pork chops and chicken pieces in homemade seal oil. In order to supply his family with treasured seal meat and oil, he relies on an intact environment that is home to the seals. The way Kuzuguk spoke about the bearded seal - the seal species that Shishmaref hunters rely on most – was with deep respect and understanding of the animals' life cycle. The bearded seal, he said, can live up to 30 years, doesn't sexually mature until they are seven years old and are monogamous animals that breed only every four to seven years. The strange seal disease that has been observed this summer in spotted, ringed and bearded seals has been very unsettling, and Kuzuguk wondered whether there could be an environmental cause to the disease.

During a meeting with Shell last year in Shishmaref Kuzuguk realized that things are about to change. "They came to Shishmaref and wanted local input to their plans of exploring, but to me, it seemed like a done deal and our input wasn't wanted," Kuzuguk said. So, he hit the computer and Googled everything on Arctic oil and gas explo-

"In my opinion we need to pay attention to alternative energy production with wind or solar," Kuzuguk said. Promote recycling and even better, instead of making new stuff and us buying it, consume less and so less energy would be needed to produce those things that only end up in the landfill. Kuzuguk was clearly alarmed by what he found. He is concerned about sonar and seismic surveys that employ air guns and cannons to blast sound into the ocean, which in turn was shown to cause hemorrhaging in whales' brains and could impact their migration routes. But what scares him most is the prospect of huge drill rigs and an armada of exploration vessels heading past Sarichef Island up into the Chukchi Sea. "Image an oil spill in the Arctic!" he said, horrified. Response would be nine to 12 weeks and that doesn't include calculating for bad weather, Kuzuguk said. Shell's oil spill response plan that has been OK'd by the Department of the Interior's Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement last week includes a requirement that Shell terminate drilling into any hydrocarbon-bearing zones 38 days prior to November 1 so that if an accident were to occur, all capping, response and well killing operations could be conducted in open water before ice forms in Chukchi waters. Seal disease still a concern among hunters

By Diana Haecker

During last week's regional Environmental Conference held at the Mini Convention Center in Nome, Gay Sheffield, field agent with the Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advisor Program, UAF Northwest Campus in Nome, gave a review and update on the seal disease that has been observed in spotted, ringed and bearded seals. Sheffield said right off the bat that researchers still don't know the cause of the illness, but it doesn't seem to be passed on to humans or dogs consuming meat from the sick

The symptoms of the disease are bald to patchy hair in seals, lesions and zit-like, open and weeping sores and very tired and exhausted animals. Sheffield said a Nome miner operating an ocean gold dredge reported a seal repeatedly resting on the dredge and the animal appeared to be struggling to breathe, sounding to have congested lungs. Other observations included animals that were resting on the beach, didn't run from humans and when some tried to carry them to the ocean, they went right back to the beach, resting.

Sheffield said that hair loss in seals is not a new phenomena but the combination of open sores, mostly between flippers and around the eyes and the tired demeanor of the animals indicates a new and unknown sickness. Unsettling to hunters, who harvest those marine mammals for subsistence foods, is the widespread occurrence of diseased seals. Sick seals, and walruses were observed from Canada down the northwestern Alaska coast down to Hooper Bay and just last week, a report of a sick seal arrived from Togiak. The most recent cases reported in 2012 involved a few ringed seals in Hokkaido, Japan, a ringed seal in Nome, a ringed seal in Russia and two seals caught and harvested in Togiak that showed hairloss and le-

Sheffield said that hunters observed also an odd smell when butchering diseased animals. Sheffield said that rather than the seals loosing hair, it appears that when they molt in the summer time, new hair doesn't seem to be growing back, leaving the animals with dull, ugly looking coats and bald patches that can be quite extensive, giving the animals a bald look.

Around October, during the fall hunt, reports started to pour in from all over the region. Hunters reported seals showing the symptoms and began sending the diseased animals in body bags to pathologists, who to this date, have ruled out certain diseases but still can't explain what the cause of the illness is. "There wouldn't be such a response to this if communities and hunters wouldn't have been so diligent in reporting of these events and sending in the carcasses," said Sheffield.

This ended in a federal declaration of an Unusual Mortality Event -UME for short - which opened the door for more funding. However, the UME declaration, researchers issued

Polar Code talks stalled in IMO subcommittee meeting

By Diana Haecker

In a meeting room in London, far away from the polar regions, the German chairwoman of the International Maritime Organization's sub committee on ship design and equipment shelved discussions of environmental rules as part of the Polar Code for a year, effectively pushing the completion of the code further into the future.

While the news has not made bold headlines anywhere, it is of importance to Alaska and the region as the Mandatory Polar Code is supposed to establish rules to ensure high levels of shipping safety by including ship construction provisions, onboard equipment requirements and the inclusion of an environmental protection chapter.

As the IMO sub-committee on ship design and equipment charged with coordinating work on the Polar Code — discussed both the shipping safety and the environmental component of the Polar Code, Anneliese Jost, the chairwoman of the sub-committee suspended discussions on the environmental part until their next meeting, a year from now.

"In light of the ever-growing need to protect the Arctic environment and communities from the increased impact of shipping, the decision to put off the environmental chapter of the Polar Code for an entire year is an outrage," wrote Doug Norlen in an email correspondence to The Nome Nugget. Norlen is with the group Pacific Environment and attended the IMO meeting as an observer in London. Norlen said that there were many countries involved on many sides of the issue. "I would say that this setback represents a collective failure of all countries, including the U.S., to prioritize the environmental parts of the code," Norlen wrote. The major objections stem from complaints from the shipping corporations that get their government allies to raise every objection imaginable in order to block Polar Code progress.

An IMO spokesperson said that more time is needed to discuss the finer details of a proposed new mandatory Code for ships operating in polar waters.

But not all is lost. A working group tackled the technical parts of the draft Code and the sub-committee agreed with the group's recommendation to forward relevant sections to the sub-committees on radio communications, search and rescue; fire protection; safety of navigation; stability, load lines and fishing vessel safety; training and watch keeping for their review and input.

The official version according to the IMO spokesperson why talks about environmental rules in the Polar Code were stalled goes like this: in relation to environmental aspects of the Code, "the ship design and equipment sub-committee noted that the working group had been divided as to whether the environmental protection provisions should be elaborated as a part of the Code, or as amendments to the relevant annexes of MARPOL and other appropriate IMO instruments, and decided to keep any decision on environmental requirements to be included in the Code in abeyance pending further consideration by the Marine Environment Protection Committee." This MEPC is meeting this week in

The MARPOL Convention is the main international convention covering prevention of pollution of the marine environment by oil, chemicals, and harmful substances in packaged form, sewage and garbage.

The sub-committee agreed to urge the MEPC and other committees to prioritize the discussion on how to make the Polar Code mandatory at their upcoming meetings.

The prospect of saving more than 40 percent in transportation time and fuel costs for ships sailing and transporting goods between East Asia and Europe through the Bering Strait is appealing to shipping companies. As the summer sea ice shrinks significantly and allows the transit through either the Northern Sea Route or the Northwest Passage, more marine traffic can be expected in the future. More traffic enhances the risk of vessel groundings, spills, collisions, discharge of pollutants and noise pollution, especially in the bottleneck that is the Bering Strait. To make the mix even more lethal, add in the lack of navigational charts, inhospitable and violent sea and weather conditions, and no vessel route protocols nor search and rescue infrastructure.

Ten years ago, the IMO, a United Nations agency that establishes standards for the safety and security of worldwide maritime operations, began developing a so-called Polar Code. The Polar Code is meant to lay the ground rules for ships operating in polar waters, both Arctic and Antarctic, and would cover the design, construction, equipment, operational, training, search and rescue matters as well as environmental protection. The IMO Assembly agreed to develop a mandatory Polar Code after adopting guidelines for ships operating in Arctic waters in 2009. The guidelines are recommendations only, not binding legal requirements on how to operate vessels in Arctic Alaska's Northern Waters Task Force recently issued its findings to the Alaska Legislature, including the recommendation to work with the United States and the international community to finalize the Polar Code. In its recommendations the ANWTF reasoned that ships navigating the Arctic are governed by the same requirements as any other open water ships, hence, no polar class or ice capability requirements are mandatory. The ANWTF recommendations paper says that "the IMO needs to finalize the Polar Code to supplement international maritime and environmental conventions that already apply in the Arctic. Polar Code can provide additional requirements regarding rescue equipment, passenger safety, firefighting, ice navigation and navigation in unin-habited areas." The task force expected the Polar Code would be approved by 2014, but the outcome of last week's meeting doesn't not bode well for a timely adoption of a Polar Code.

This week, the IMO's Marine Environmental Protection Committee is meeting to discuss the Polar Code.

Observer Norlen is not confident that this committee will make any progress. "The MEPC also delayed consideration of the Polar Code at its last meeting and we fear it could happen again," wrote Norlen. "We are very concerned that the IMO and its member states are shirking their responsibilities to develop a Polar Code that protects the Arctic environment and its people."

Senate Bill 171 faces uphill battle in the House

By Lori Head

The new Commissioner of Education and Early Development, Mike Hanley, "asked us as superintendents to return to our districts and to look at how much money, how much of an increase that we would need in the BSA. He said, 'Look at how much you would need to just maintain what you have,'" explains Mike Brawner, superintendent of Nome Public Schools. This was tasked to superintendents from all of Alaska's school districts last summer.

Responses from 48 of 53 school districts were received and an average amount needed calculated to $320 per student. As a result, Senate Bill No. 171 was introduced to the legislature in January recommending an increase to the Base Student Allocation of $125 effective July 2012, an additional $130 effective July 2013 and a final addition of $135 to the BSA, effective July 2014. It would be the first increase to state per-pupil funding since 2010. Over the three years, the bill would bump the BSA up by $390 to $6,070 per student.

Alaska Association of School Boards is bolstering the case with talking points including:

• SB 171 is affordable. At $30.4 million, the first year increase of $125 to the BSA equates to less than 70 cents per school day for each of Alaska's 130,000 public school students.

• Schools are not flush with money. Without SB 171, hundreds of school personnel will be laid off. Even with SB 171 funding, there will be budget cuts and jobs lost to pay for rising transportation, energy, insurance and personnel costs.

• A three-year schedule of investments in K-12 schools, as proposed in SB 171, is necessary for school boards to plan and sustain educational improvements.

SB 171 was passed, 18-2, by the Senate. Senator Donny Olson was one of the 18 "yea" votes.

The bill was then fast tracked by the House to the House Finance Committee which is led by co-chairs Rep. Bill Stoltze and Rep. Bill Thomas and is where the bill currently resides.

House Democrats claim that keeping the per-student funding the same for the past two years essentially amounts to a funding cut due to inflation.

House Republicans lean towards education spending directed at specific needs such as energy prices.

Governor Sean Parnell is balking at the bill stating, "They have just spent half a billion dollars more on education and they have not required any results or anything transformational to occur within the system." Reports state that the governor favors adding one-time monies to the education budget.

House Speaker Mike Chenault explains on his website, "I, along with the governor, have expressed a reluctance to add money to the Base Student Allocation – the formula we use to fund education. Two years ago, the BSA finished a three-year funding increase cycle I helped negotiate along with now-Senator Kevin Meyer. We forward-funded education, changed the fuel cost trigger, adjusted the BSA up successively, and equalized local district cost factors (the amounts schools can expect versus the Anchorage funding baseline.)...Education funding needs to be adequately addressed – on that we all agree. The differences are in how we get there."

Brawner heads to Juneau in early March to meet with superintendents from around the state and with legislators as he supports SB 171. He points out that although Nome would certainly benefit from one-time monies and funding for specific needs, "The bottom line is this: If they want to put funding into the system that is going to impact more students across this state, it's not through a stimulus package. That funding needs to go into the BSA. And that BSA does align with every student attending public schools in this state."

NYO Youngsters wow the crowd

By Joni Earp

Nome Wolverines in grades K-2 inspired smiles and cheers from the crowd as they worked their way through three Native Youth Olympic events on Saturday. The youngsters have practiced twice a week for 30-minute sessions since January. Students involved in the program gained experience with the format of formal NYO competition, and practiced sportsmanship.

The first event of the afternoon was the kneel jump. The kneel jump is an event in which an athlete performs a jump from the seated position with the feet flat underneath them. The students have three attempts at the jump, and attempt to land with both feet simultaneously. The distance from the back of the heel is measured from the starting line. The kneel jump was invented to simulate lifting game off of the ground without the use of hands after a successful hunt. Imagine jumping to your feet while holding a hindquarter of a moose on your shoulders!

Leg wrestling was a favorite for the students as they tested their strength against one another. Kaitlin Johnson made a comeback for the girls after losing her first match. She ended up taking second place losing her final match to Natalie Tobuk. Tobuk is an experienced wrestler finishing two full seasons of NYO with the team.

Paris Hebel won leg wrestling for the boys taking Landon Weiler in the final match.

Two-foot high kickers maintained poise and balance as the stakes increased. The two-foot requires that an athlete keep their feet together on take off, during the kick, and at the landing. This took much focus and tenacity for the youngsters, but they maintained the most important component of the jump ... a smile! Great ending to a great season!

Superintendent's contract extended

By Lori Head

Nome Board of Education met on February 21, in a special, 8.5 minute meeting. Board vice-president Barb Nickels chaired the meeting as board president, Betsy Brennan participated telephonically.

Brennan read, over the phone, the statement she made previously after the executive session in January: "We met in executive session to discuss the evaluation of the superintendent. Mr. Brawner received a positive evaluation. The Board offered, and Mr. Brawner accepted, a contract extension to June of 2014 with no change to the current contract."

The board then voted on the oneyear contract extension at this special meeting. It was approved by four board members: Brennan, Nickels, Reader and Karmun. Board member Barb Amarok voted no.

Margaret Thomas, parent of a high school student, took advantage of the opportunity to address the board and commended Brawner for his forthrightness in bringing "truly shocking" student reading level statistics to the public's attention through a recent article in the Nugget. "I've seen the district adopt new instructional materials, new programs, training, re-training, reading coaches; none of those things is going to work by itself...What I hope the community will take away from that is that it's an issue that all of us are going to have to contribute to solving if it's going to be solved."

The school board met again in a work session on Tuesday, February 28 at 5:30 p.m.

The Nome Nanooks finished off their regular season schedule last weekend at the Den of the Mighty

Nanooks, falling to the Barrow Whalers in both games. The losses > that did not disappoint. On the first night, which recognized the two seniors, Nathan Blandford and Jens Irelan, the Nome boys fell 56-43. The game started good for the Nanooks who jumped out to a 12-10 first quarter lead. But in the second quarter, the game changed drastically as Barrow outscored Nome 17-8 in the second quarter taking a 7-point lead to the locker room at halftime. From there, Nome never could make a second half charge as Barrow won convincingly snapping the winning streak of the Nanooks.

> Nathan Blandford came out strong on the night he was recognized, scoring a game high 20 points. However, the problem for the Nanooks was the scoring from the rest of the squad as no one else on the Nanooks scored in double figures, giving Blandford simply not enough help. The Barrow Whalers meanwhile had three different players score in double digits.

> In the second game, Nome got down at halftime by 13 points. But in the second half, Nome made a charge, but it was not enough as they fell in the end, 43-40. It was one of the more exciting games of the Nome season, as the Den of the Mighty Nanooks exploded as the Nanooks made a huge push in the second half.

"We did not like our offense for much of the first game and the first half of this game, so we decided to move the ball better against their zone," said Pat Callahan, head coach of the Nanooks.

Irelan, the other senior, led the scoring in this one for the Nanooks with 11 points, while Tyler Eide added 10 along with Blandford's 9.

With the two losses against Barrow, it means the Nanooks now head to Regionals in Anchorage this weekend on a three game losing streak. With a young team as Nome is, it would be something that may be concerning as to how they will bounce back emotionally. But Callahan, who knows his team as good as anyone, says that he is not concerned

"We are very excited right now. Our goal was to teach our guys that they can compete with a team like Barrow, and I think we did just that," said Callahan.

The Nome boys, who have the #2 seed behind Barrow in the Regionals, will look to make a strong run in the tournament to qualify for the State tournament. The action is scheduled to begin for the boys this Thursday at

Nome Lady Nanooks fall to Barrow in regular season finale

By Stephen Palmatier

Last weekend marked the end of the regular season for the Nome Lady Nanooks, but it did not finish quite as they had hoped. The ladies dropped both games against the Barrow Lady Whalers in Barrow, but both games were well fought contests.

In the first game, Barrow won 51-46 in a game that was close throughout. At halftime, the Lady Whalers had a 29-26 lead and a four point lead after three quarters. The Nome ladies, led by a game high 21 points from Shayla Johnson, were able to stay right with the Lady Whalers, but they simply could never get in front. Devynn Johnson added 12 points also for the Lady Nanooks in the first loss

In the second game, it was very much the same story as Barrow came out on top 62-54. Again, it was another even game for most of the way. Shayla Johnson led the Lady Nanooks in scoring with 18 points and Dylan Johnson added 17 of her

Even with the two losses, there are a lot of things that point to the Lady Nanooks being encouraged to go forward. Not only did the Nome ladies play Barrow very tough in both games, but also they got great production from Shayla Johnson over the weekend who averaged 19 points per game over the weekend.

Shavla, who has been the third option scorer for most of the year for the Nome ladies, very much took over as one of the big scoring threats for the squad. It is part of what has made Shayla easily the most improved player on the squad throughout the season.

With the two losses to Barrow, the only way the Lady Nanooks have to view it is positive as next weekend is Regionals for the Nome squad. The importance of confidence and belief cannot be underestimated, especially with a Nome team such as this that has been so up and down all season long. The Nome ladies look to bounce back from this weekend with a strong tournament in Regionals which takes place in Anchorage. The Lady Nanooks are scheduled to begin their tournament play this Thursday at 6:15 on January 23rd went well, but a nasty infection set in three weeks later. My surgeon operated again, Monday of last week, cleansed the wound, removed the artificial joint, and inserted a spacer and plenty of antibiotics. They identified the infections; E coli, and a treatable Staph infection. They put me on a six-week regimen of IV antibiotics, which may run longer if needed. I am now at the Landmark extended care facility in Athens, near the VFW hall and Bishop Park, room 114. Both the Staph and E. Coli infections are responding to the antibiotics. After three more weeks, Janice and I will head home for continued treatment. More weeks of antibiotics may follow and when all traces of these bugs have disappeared, they will re-install a new hip

My blood pressure spiked twice last week, but my infectious disease specialist diagnosed the presence of too many beautiful nurses in this facility. That's our diagnosis and we're sticking with it.

Despite these recent setbacks, life has gone extremely well for us. Number 1 son, Ryan, has taken a job with Norton Sound Health Corporation in Nome Alaska, where he continues to live. Fran's daughter Sarah and her husband Tyler Jacobson are raising two wonderful kids— Henry Dean and Eva Frances - in Denver, CO. Janice's children, Jim and Lane Norton, live three blocks away. What more can we say?

My medical adventure has been and will remain a difficult journey, but Janice and I are surrounded by the love of family and friends; Jim and Lane Norton, Andy and company, Waymond Mundy, et al. Janice has been at my side throughout. Presuming the treatment ends successfully; we will take our second honeymoon to properly celebrate 20 years of a lovely marriage. Don't hesitate to call or write.

Best wishes and much love to you all. We hope that your lives are going well. Times like these remind me what life is all about-family and friends.

I still plan to hike the Appalachian Trail from start to finish. That dream remains alive, and I invite you to join me.

Hi Nancy,

I enjoyed reading the story in the recent Nome Nugget: "Pick Your Doctor-NSHC Takes Patient-Centred Approach to Healthcare." This concept is long overdue in the Norton Sound region. Having worked as a Physician Assistant in Nome at Norton Sound Regional Hospital in the outpatient department as well as out in the villages, I appreciate how challenging it can be to ensure that quality medical care is being provided for all and that an effective model of healthcare is utilized. I applaud NSHC for moving forward with this model of healthcare. Providing quality medical care in any community is a tremendous challenge but to provide quality medical care to approximately 10,000 people resident in Nome and 15 outlying villages scattered over thousands of square miles and with such unpredictable weather is even a greater challenge under the best of circum-

The idea of involving patients directly in their care by giving them a choice as to their healthcare provider is a step in the right direction. One of the great challenges in medicine is to affect positive and healthy change in the lives of our patients and that begins with the patientprovider relationship and the patient feeling good about the provider they see and building a trusting relationship with that provider.

Such a trusting relationship, when it exists, provides the best chance for success in helping patients get better. If they respect and trust their provider, there is a better chance they will listen to the advice of that provider and follow the medical advice given them.

The team concept in medicine also needs to be developed. Long gone are the days when one provider manages all the healthcare needs for the community. Here in Oregon, where I currently live, the concept of the "medical home" is becoming more and more accepted as the model that can provide the best quality of care for patients.

The team concept mentioned in the Nugget article is a step in that direction. It first gives the patient, whether a Nome resident or a village resident, some say in who they will see for their regular healthcare thus engaging them in their care right from the start.

It then brings in additional team support through involving other heath professionals in the care of the patient through daily consultations thus identifying the varied healthcare needs of the patient before they are even seen and then involving those healthcare professionals who have been involved in or will be involved in treating the patient in the final discussion of a comprehensive care plan for the patient.

This model also allows for an oft overlooked yet most vital issue to be addressed—prevention. Prevention often takes a back seat to treating diseases once they have gained a foothold in our patients. This is not the right way to approach illness/wellness. This proactive approach to healthcare NSHC is taking is desperately needed and it will benefit Nomeites and those out in the villages over the long run. This translates into a healthier Norton Sound region.

My best to all involved in this en-Peace,

Hello Out There,

Lately I look out my window and see such a beautiful sight and miss being out there in it.

Because of my stupid foot I have been out of commission for a good half a year, so I have been pretending I'm not around, so I have let a few people down and would like to apologize to them. But, I let down one of my best friends and now she's dead. I don't know if I'll ever forgive myself. I can no longer send one of my kids over to see if she's ready to wander around.

If the cops would have listened when we called and told them she wanted her daughter out, maybe things would have ended differently. As it is, they said, in order to get a restraining order you have to have already been beaten or fear for your life. Can't just kick a person out. Can you imagine how much money they could save on medical bills, money that could be used elsewhere, if they would change the wording on

The other thing they need to deal with is the amount of time people get who beat other people up, or kill them. The law has become way too lenient on the people doing those kind of things. No wonder people think they can do it over and over again. Our laws are letting them get away with it. We need to write to our legislators and ask them to change the laws.

Have you noticed more and more companies are being bought up by foreign countries. That is a scary

Oh, and I think the Permanent Fund Dividends should go to the people who were born and raised here in Alaska, along with the other people who were here when it became a State. There are getting to be too many immigrants moving to Alaska for the money.

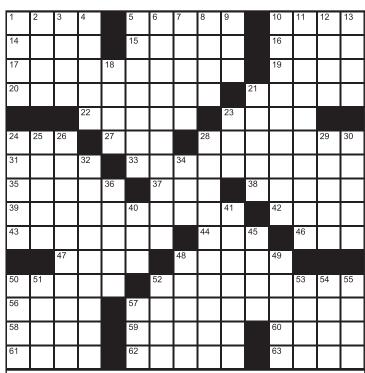

Anyway, don't forget about the Elders when you go hunting, or fishing, or something. After all, they were doing that before us and would love to have that something. And the stinkweed. It really is good for you. Take care you all. Always good to see you, think of you anyway.

How to catch a killer cancer before it starts

By Bob Lawrence, MD

Colonoscopy reduces deaths from colon cancer by 50 percent, according to a study published last week in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Cancers in the colon or rectum, called colorectal cancers, are the second leading cause of cancer death in the United States, behind lung cancer.

The NEIM study shows that colonoscopy can potentially cut this risk in half. In fact, a closer look at the data shows that one life is saved for every 200 people who

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Karen Sonray of Our Savior Lutheran Church Member Nome Ministerial Association

"... He led them up a high mountain apart, by themselves. He was transfigured before them, and his clothes became dazzling white."

I grew up in the 1960s and can remember well where I was at the untimely and tragic deaths of President Kennedy, Martin Luther King, Jr. and Robert F. Kennedy.

As a young man, Martin Luther King, Jr. set his eyes toward the academy and had plans to become a college professor. He excelled in intellectual and scholarly pursuits. But history called him away from the "ivory palaces" to the streets where his neighbor was suffering. He said no to the heights of the academy, and instead took up the non-violent civil rights movement in the 1960s. He entered the struggle and confronted our nation's system that still did not allow the freedom and equal rights for people of all colors. Ultimately he gave his life to this cause.

Recently, I re-read the story of Jesus' transfiguration found in Mark 9:2-9. It takes place on a mountain top, high apart from the hectic crowds and ministry. There before four of his disciples he was "transfigured." The light shined through him. His true glory was revealed. A voice came out from the clouds and was heard, "This is my Son, the beloved, listen to him." Rather than remaining above the fray in the heights of glory, however, Jesus came down from that mountain, into the very valleys of our human predicaments and existence. Ultimately Jesus gave his life for our salvation.

This gospel story of Jesus inspired Martin Luther King, Jr.'s life and indeed his last speech, which is often referred to as the "mountain top speech." King gave that speech on April 3, 1968, the night before his death in Memphis, Tennessee. In that speech he said,

"Like anybody, I would like to live a long life. Longevity has its place. But I'm not concerned about that now. I just want to do God's will. And He's allowed me to go up to the mountain. And I've looked over. And I've seen the Promised Land. I may not get there with you. But I want you to know tonight, that we, as a people, will get to the Promised Land!'

He also said, "It's all right to talk about "long white robes over yonder," in all of its symbolism. But ultimately people want some suits and dresses and shoes to wear down here! It's all right to talk about "streets flowing with milk and honey," but God has commanded us to be concerned about the slums down here, and his children who can't eat three square meals a day. It's all right to talk about the new Jerusalem, but one day, God's preacher must talk about the new New York, the new Atlanta, the new Philadelphia, the new Los Angeles, the new Memphis, Tennessee. This is what we have to have polyps removed during routine screening. Those are not bad numbers when it comes to a onetime screening procedure.

May these words of King and this story of Jesus still inspire us today and shape what we have to do.

The new research supports previous statements made by the Cen-for Disease Control and Prevention that over the last decade the number of deaths from colorectal cancer has fallen largely due to regular cancer screening.

Colorectal cancers grow very slowly. Most tumors start as small skin-tag like structures called adenomatous polyps that are often no larger than a small berry. It may take 10-15 years for a polyp to grow into an invasive deadly cancer. If detected early, these polyps can be removed, thereby preventing any future development of can-

The key is to find the cancer while it is small and easily removed. Symptoms of colorectal cancer like abdominal pain and rectal bleeding unfortunately develop very late in the disease. Therefore screening is vital to detect colorectal cancer in its earliest and most treatable form.

The American Cancer Society recognizes several methods for colorectal cancer screening. The most reliable screening exam is a DOCTOR colonoscopy. test allows the physician to directly visualize the entire colon and remove polyps or biopsy suspicious lesions using a thin scope.

Other screening options include: fecal blood testing, a lab test looking for trace amounts of blood in the stool; flexible sigmoidoscopy, a shorter version of the colonoscopy that screens about a third of the colon; a double-contrast barium Xray that gives radiologists a snapshot of the entire colon; and virtual colonoscopy which uses computed tomography (CT scanner) to screen for polyps.

alternate methods, These though admittedly more comfortable, do not replace the need for colonoscopy if cancer is suspected. For example, if trace amounts of blood are found in the stool, or if a polyp or suspected cancer is identified by CT or X-ray, a person would still need to undergo colonoscopy to evaluate the source of bleeding, remove the polyp, or to biopsy the suspected cancer. Furthermore, only colonoscopy can detect polyps when they are very

Therefore most experts recommend a full colonoscopy every 10 years for otherwise healthy persons over age 50 or younger persons with a strong family history of colorectal cancer.

Patients have many options for colorectal cancer screening in Alaska. During your next exam, talk to your doctor about colorectal screening especially if you are over age 50, have never been screened, or have a family history of colorectal cancers.

Obituary

Timothy Grenfell Ryan

Timothy Grenfell Ryan was born to Eunice and Frank Ryan on September 24, 1946. He died, as was his wish, in his Unalakleet home on February 18, 2012.

Tim was raised in Unalakleet and also on his parents' homestead far up the Unalakleet River. He attended Unalakleet BIA School and graduated from Mt. Edgecumbe High School in Sitka. Following high school he enlisted in the United States Navy. He attended Haskell Institute in Lawrence, Kansas after his Navy years and began a long career as a FAA air traffic specialist, first in Kotzebue and then Nome. He eventually returned home to Unalakleet where he lived until his death, following a courageous battle with cancer.

Tim was a very private person who enjoyed his solitude, but also cherished his friendships. His joys were fishing and hunting for moose and waterfowl. Tim enjoyed keeping track of the weather and watching the ocean. He loved to go on spur of the moment camping trips with his brother Henry or other friends. He looked forward to spring and loved to experiment with plants in his garden.

He will be deeply missed by his extended family, including many nieces and nephews, and his good friends, Randy Toshavik of Unalakleet and Gus Kusak of Anchor-

Tim was preceded in death by his parents, Frank and Eunice; grandmothers, Sinrock Mary and Agnes Ryan; brothers, Wilfred Paul Ryan. Sr., Frank Stanley Ryan, Timothy Grenfell Ryan I, and Glenn Jonathan Ryan.

Tim is survived by his children, Cheryl Richards and Kenny Richards, their mother, Gladys Nelson, all of Kotzebue, his only grandchild, Tyler (Cheryl), whom Tim was especially proud of; sister, Mabel Katongan, brothers, Sheldon and Henry (Isabelle) Ryan; and Eunice's second husband, Daniel Soxie.

Peace to his memory "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot Save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear." Isaiah 59:1

In other coastal news, the Northern Waters Task Force Final Report has been recently released. I am privileged to be a part of the Northern Waters Task Force and the important work that has been done to address issues in our northern coastal waters. To this date, this Final Report is the most detailed statement of Alaska's Arctic Policy. I am grateful to the Chairman, Representative Reggie Joule and his staff for all their hard work. I'd also like to commend all the Task Force members and to those who participated in the public hearings across the state Coast Guard Icebreaker, Healy, breaking away for the Renda.

The 3 priority recommendations highlighted in the report are:

1. Providing Alaskans with opportunities to be involved in Arctic policy. This is an ongoing state, federal, and local process.

2. Creating an Alaskan Arctic Commission, which will enable Alaska to be better prepared for changes and development plans and to create a state strategy for the Arctic.

3. Urging the United States Senate to ratify the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. Ratification is critical for several reasons, primarily for allowing for the U.S. to claim sovereignty of the Arctic seafloor more than 200 miles north from Alaska's coast and for our state to claim the economic benefits from this ownership.

The NWTF Final Report is now complete and available. The complete report is accessible on the web at www.anwtf.com.

(ACMP). According to the Lieutenant Governor's Office, the citizen initiative to establish an ACMP appears to have gathered more than the minimum number of qualified signatures required for a determination of proper filing, Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell announced earlier last month. The Division of Elections has determined that at least 25,875 qualified subscribers, from at least 30 out of 40 legislative districts, signed the initiative petition.

For legal reasons, all signatures that were submitted by petition sponsors on January 17, 2012 are still being reviewed by the Division of Elections. The lieutenant governor has 60 days from the date the sponsors filed their petition to make a final determination of proper or improper filing. In addition, all signatures on a petition for a ballot measure must be examined for purposes of voter registration list maintenance. To my knowledge, the state election officials recently announced that sufficient signatures were qualified to put this initiative on this year's ballot.

Upon a determination of proper filing, the initiative may appear on the next statewide general, special, or primary election that is held 120 days after a legislative session has convened and adjourned and a period of 120 days has expired since the adjournment of the legislative session.

According to the Juneau Empire, the House Majority Leader, Representative Alan Austerman recently introduced legislation, HB 285 to reestablish the coastal management plan which is substantially similar to the initiative. However, it is still too early to predict the outcome of this particular piece of legislation.

from across Alaska and introduced legislation to utilize a small portion of the state's $3.7 billion surplus to provide Alaskans with relief from high energy costs.

Senate Bill 203 provides Alaskans with immediate energy relief through fuel vouchers, and develops a program to help residents deal with high heating costs during the transition to more affordable en-

The bill's sponsors include Senators Joe Thomas and Joe Paskvan (Fairbanks), Senator Lyman Hoffman (Bethel), Senator Tom Wagoner (Kenai), Senator Johnny Ellis (Anchorage) and myself.

SB 203 directs the Alaska Department of Revenue to send a voucher to every adult Permanent Fund Dividend recipient in the fall of 2012, which can be redeemed at the fuel distributor of their choice for either 250 gallons of heating oil, an equivalent amount of natural gas, or 1,500 KWH of electricity.

The bill then calls for the state to evaluate several options for ongoing energy relief and recommend a program that can be put into effect for 2013 and beyond. The analysis and recommendation are due back to the legislature by October 1, 2012. The program designed by the state must provide energy relief to Alaskans based on the local cost of home heating, taking into consideration the price of fuel and average temperature of the community.

Senator Joe Thomas, the prime sponsor of SB 203, explained, "High energy prices fill the state's treasury, but hit Alaska's working families hard. We intend to use a portion of the State of Alaska's $3.7 billion surplus - about 9 cents of every surplus dollar - to deliver real energy relief to Alaskans this year."

Senator Lyman Hoffman added, "Our intention is to craft a program that helps all Alaskans and treats equitably those hit hardest by the high cost of energy. This year's record cold winter and rising fuel prices have created a hardship for many Alaskans. This proposal will provide relief this year, and develop a program to help families in the fu-

Road to Umiat In the twelve years that I've served in the legislature, I have not seen such passionate opposition to road construction as the delegates from the North Slope area have expressed to me. It is my understanding from the Anaktuvuk Pass area, there is unanimous agreement across the North Slope that this road is going to severely interfere and inhibit subsistence lifestyle. Over the last several years we've seen that the porcupine caribou herd no longer comes through the Anaktuvuk Pass area, as well as very little fish & game enforcement for hunting along the Dalton Highway and ANWR Area. Normally, the people of the North Slope are very considerate and have no opposition to responsible development. Prudhoe Bay, we've seen the positive effects of responsible development and how it improves the quality of life in proximate communities. However, in this case, the people of the North Slope strongly oppose this particular development and recommend an alternative route, such as the Meltwater option where a road would be constructed from the Spine Road south to Umiat. Normally, I am not opposed to development as long as it's done responsibly. In this case, I have to voice my direct opposition in respect to the delegation of my constituents in the Anaktuvuk Pass area who represented the North Slope Borough and the Arctic Slope Regional Corporation in this matter. It is important that we stand united on

Furthermore, the state has already spent tens of millions of dollars to consider this proposal. The Senate Finance Committee has been informed that in 2015, our state will have a negative deficit spending balance. Also, it is my understanding the state is funding this development on its own. In spite of the oil companies stating they will be contributing to this particular development, they have not contributed any funds to this study. It does not make any sense that the state would spend the money and in light of the opposition that stands against it.

Connecting the dots

Other conference presenters included Mike Brubaker with the Center for Climate Change and Health at the Alaska Native Health Consortium. Brubaker showed several climate-induced changes in rural Alaska, making the point that people need to start rethinking how to plan for settlements in coastal Alaska that is prone to see the worst effects of climate change. He also showed slides of a failed sewage lagoon overflow concept that ended up eroding the tundra. He showed slides of flooding in the village of Selawik, where homes are sinking as soil is eroding and where water and sewer pipes are not well connected and breaking, causing sanitation issues because of poor planning. "We've got to step back and see if erosion prevention is working and if there are places where we just shouldn't

Brubaker said it is important to connect the dots and in order to do so, his office scans Alaskan and Arctic news outlets for reports on climate changes and sends out weekly Climate and Health E-news emails with links to those climate reports. Brubaker also talked about a local environmental observer network that works on the premise that arctic communities are changing and local observers are the eyes and ears of this change. Local observers post their observations of extreme weather, erosion, flooding and other unusual events to the LEO website and thus add pieces to the puzzle of unusual climate events, creating a bigger picture.

The conference attracted some 80 participants from Nome and every community in the Bering Strait and Norton Sound region. Organizers and participants voiced the hope that a gathering like this would be repeated annually to provide a forum to compare notes on environmental issues impacting the regional com-

Sheffield said that researchers are looking for all the "normal" things that veterinarians would test for, but the disease doesn't seem to be of viral origin. Is it an immune-system related disease, fungi, brought on by bio-toxins or other man-made contaminants? Nobody knows.

As spring hunting season nears, hunters are eager to learn the news on progress of the research. Sheffield, being on the ground in Nome and frequently traveling to the outlying communities, said that hunters consider this a food security concern and are anxious to learn more. Sheffield stressed in her presentation that there are still many, many healthy seals around and also encouraged hunters and the ladies who butcher the seals or walrus to use their customary caution and not consume or eat anything that looks or smells out of the ordinary.

What's next? Sheffield asked the hunters present in the audience to remain vigilant, report and document seals or walrus showing the disease. To me, reports of bald seals living through this winter is good news. It means that they are making it even through this extreme cold," she said.

The Nome Nugget contacted various lead scientists charged with the UME investigation with requests for information on the progress, but has not received a single response in a two-week time period.

Dallas Seavey cinches Iditarod XL

By Diana Haecker

A third generation Seavey made the clan proud as 25-year-old Dallas Seavey of Willow arrived on Tuesday evening at 7:29 p.m. as the first musher of the 2012 Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race under the burled arch in Nome. Seavey's team traveled up the Iditarod Trail in 9 days, 4 hours, 29 minutes and 26 seconds. Under blue skies, with a light breeze blowing and illuminated by the soft light of the setting sun, Dallas Seavey drove up Front Street, greeting the crowd of a few hundred people closing in to high five the new champion on his way to the finish ramp.

Looking over his shoulder all the way from White Mountain to Nome, Seavey said at the finish line that he wasn't sure of his victory until sitting on the champion throne with his lead dogs wearing the roses. Pretty much all the way up the coast, Seavey was chased by Aliy Zirkle, at times only five miles apart from Seavey, followed by Ramey Smyth and Aaron Burmeister – all within striking distance. After receiving the $50,400 winner's check and the key to a brand new Dodge truck, Seavey acknowledged the top caliber of his competitors. "When you've got Aliy Zirkle and Ramey Smith behind you, even if they're a day behind, you always look over your shoulder," Seavey said. He said that it crossed his mind that a win might be within reach going into Takotna. "Going into Ruby, I thought, gee, we have a real chance," Seavey said. He talked about emotional swings that went up and down with each hill his team climbed. Seavey said he bought his entire team from other mushers. "Meaning that they were not the Dallas Seavey hails from a long line of mushers, including his grandfather Dan Seavey who raced in the first Iditarod in 1973 and is this year on the trail again, and his father Mitch, who won the 2004 Iditarod and was on his way to Nome from White Mountain as Dallas pulled under the burled arch.

Exactly one hour later, the siren sounded again and a thin but very vocal crowd greeted runner-up Aliy Zirkle. She arrived under the burled arch with 10 dogs at 8:29 p.m. Ramey Smyth followed and arrived at 9:04 p.m. with 9 dogs in harness.

By Diana Haecker It was a long, cold night for Aliy

Zirkle, probably the hardest of the entire race so far, said Zirkle's husband Allen Moore, standing in Unalakleet, watching his wife get ready to leave the checkpoint on Sunday mid-morning. The temperature was close to -40°F and the run over 85 miles of trail through the Nulato Hills between Kaltag and the coast can stretch into a very uncomfortable eternity. But Zirkle of Two Rivers didn't look like she had a rough night, when she walked out of the Unalakleet checkpoint building.

Walking out of the checkpoint definitely requires a whole lot of will power as the community had prepared cozy beds for tired mushers to sleep in, plus five-star rated meals of sourdough hotcakes, freshly made fry bread, huge jars filled with home-made blueberry jam, pasta salads, baked chum salmon and other salmon delicacies.

But the Iditarod is not a vacation trip and the front-runners didn't look like they had lazed around much. On Sunday morning, at 7:28 a.m. Zirkle reached the coast first, which earned her the Wells Fargo Gold Coast award in form of a gold cup filled with $2,500 in gold nuggets acquired from Nome gold miner Jim Hansen. Scotty Watkins, branch manager for the Nome Wells Fargo along with Loren Prosser, bank president for Northwest Alaska were on hand to present the award.

Next to arrive was Dallas Seavey with 11 dogs, almost an hour after Zirkle came in. Then Nome's Aaron Burmeister arrived at 8:30 a.m. followed by Kotzebue's John Baker at 9:08 a.m. It was clear that a race was on and competitors watched closely what the other guy was doing. Inside the checkpoint building, Burmeister and Baker were having breakfast, talking with each other and willingly offering their thoughts to three reporters—a thin media crowd compared to years past.

Dear Editor:

Thank you for publishing the article, "Polar Code talks stalled in IMO Subcommittee meeting" in last week's edition. The suspended discussion on the environmental portion of the Polar Code has great implications for people living in coastal Alaska. As sea ice continues to recede in the Arctic, there is an increased number of vessels that travel the ocean-a number which is expected to continue to rise. This will directly impact whaling, seal and walrus hunting, and communities that depend on marine mammals for a cultural and subsistence way of life. These ships can harm the marine environment with increased noise and pollution that can have negative impacts on marine mammals. Currently, the International Martine Organization (IMO) is developing the mandatory set of regulations (the Polar

Pacific Environment is a nonprofit organization that works to ensure that the voices of people who will be most affected by the decisions being made at an international level are heard. Over the past several years Pacific Environment has been working at the United Nations IMO to monitor and advocate for strong protections of communities, tribes, animals and the environment. We work to include indigenous voices in IMO meetings by offering travel assistance and credentials to these ongoing meetings. We understand that the outcome directly impacts Indigenous culture, way of life, and future generations. Hello out there,

This morning I was sitting here talking with my older kids and they started talking about alcohol and how they plan to party once they move away and it broke my heart so much I decided to write about it.

I have seen so many nice people die because of it. I have seen perfectly nice people turn ugly because of it. I have seen kids be hungry because of it. I have seen people beaten up because of it. I have seen people die because of it and all the heartache it causes.

So once in a while I pretend to drink so that maybe I could understand what people see in it and no matter how old I get and how much I try, I cannot understand. I understand the hurt it's caused and the people it's broken and all I can do is try to help put back the pieces.

I tried to break the cycle but where has it gotten me? I realize my kids haven't seen it the way I did, but I can't seem to get them to understand. I don't know how to explain.

I think it's time for all of us to get together and end the cycle of abuse. Show the people that you care. Talk to them about it. Don't be scared to do so, it will show the people that you care. Talk them sober like I do at times then maybe they'd say what's the use of trying it. Talk to each other about how it's disrupting

Remember that's not why you were put here on this earth. Stop to smell the beautiful flowers or look at the beautiful scenery, it really is worth looking at. No matter how much I hurt at times, I look out my window and thank God for everything He has given me.

Take care everyone and remember you're not super human, so dress accordingly.

As always. Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

What's the Plan?

Alaska is at an important threshold in charting the path for our future. The Arctic is changing and from the looks of things our protective sheets of polar ice will no longer lock us in. Our pristine oceans will be traversed by tankers, container ships, drilling rigs, battle ships, submarines, barges and cruise ships. We will have shipping traffic in the high seas from all over the planet. We will have oil spills, toxic dumps, sewage leaks, stinking smokestacks, rusty buckets of grease and accidents waiting to happen.

It is up to Alaskans to set the policy that will protect our waters and coastline. Our fish and marine mammals are at risk, our life styles are in jeopardy. We need a concise, clear arctic policy that protects Alaska and its living creatures - all of us. We need good people to step forward and demand that our Arctic policy not be one of entrenched political greed, but one that promotes the interests of the citizens of Alaskans can't afford to let the tail wag the dog. We have vested interest in the happenings in the Arctic. We need to take a proactive role in policy making and we need to do it now. - N.L.M.-

Governor Parnell checks in with constituents in Nome

By Diana Haecker

As Legislators were on a break from the regular legislative session to attend Energy Council meetings in Washington, D.C., Governor Sean Parnell said he used the time to visit rural communities in northwest Alaska, including Nome. Parnell and his wife Sandi flew from Barrow to Nome in the State's King Air last Thursday, stayed overnight and left Friday morning to Kotzebue. "It's a great time to come into Alaska communities to get a good check with Alaskan constituents as we finish out the last weeks of the legislative session." Parnell told The Nome Roughly 30 Nomeites and community leaders attended a community reception for Parnell and his staff on Thursday night at Old St. Joe's Hall. Bob Hafner did the honors of greeting Parnell on behalf of the Nome Chamber of Commerce and John Handeland gave the official welcome as Mayor Denise Michels had traveled to Washington, D.C. to deliver Northern Waters Task Force recommendations.

Handeland said in his welcome address that Nomeites hope that the Parnell administration and legislators will get over their differences of opinion when it comes to the mechanism to provide additional school funding. "We trust there will be a compromise that will insure sufficient funding is available to meet the increasing costs, many directly related to energy costs," Handeland

Handeland said the city appreciates Parnell's support for Nome's priorities including funding for the new Richard Foster building which will house the Carrie M. McLain Memorial museum and the city's library. Handeland then presented Parnell with a historic photo taken in 1905 of a Nome Public Schools classroom and he pointed out Jimmy Doolittle sitting as a seven-year-old in the photo.

Nome priorities for 2012 funding requests include education, port development, the completion of the Norton Sound Health Corporation's Quyana Care facility and a new state office building on Front Street.

Parnell told the thin crowd that Nome shares problems with all of rural Alaska, namely meeting the energy challenge. He said that he conferred with Fairbanks and rural legislators lately on how to tackle the statewide energy problem, and said that rather than going to look at each community separately, a region-wide approach should be sought.

"One of the things that came out of it was that we need to stop looking at individual community solutions, Parnell said. "We decided to discuss how to work regionally to address larger infrastructure projects that can address the entire region." How this is to work in widespread communities off the road system has not been fleshed out.

Parnell suggested that the state could look into programs to "incentivize" small-scale natural gas exploration the in Norton Sound/Bering Strait region. "Larger companies want larger prospects, but there are smaller companies with expertise in drilling smaller wells, and drilling in Cook Inlet, we could offer similar incentives here. The North Slope Borough along with NANA have expressed interest in that," Parnell said.

Parnell took questions from the audience. So, what about preparing for a new Arctic reality and convincing the federal government to invest in new icebreakers? "The Coast Guard has asked if the state can participate in improving the communication infrastructure and I have indicated that I'm willing to do that," Parnell said. The need for icebreakers or an icebreaker fleet is a common refrain and something that we are aggressively pursuing with the Alaska delegation," Parnell said.

When asked during a subsequent interview held on Friday morning at the Nome Nugget's office, Parnell expanded briefly on the thought of an Arctic policy and said that the state last year included money in the Department of Transportation's budget for a study on deep port possibilities. "We need to know what the options are and which location would make most sense for Alaska," Parnell said.

Parnell, often at odds with federal agencies over alleged overreaching into state's business, said that he is willing to cooperate with the Coast Guard on communications improvements. "I have communicated [to the Coast Guard commandant1 that I'm willing to partner with the federal government on broadband infrastructure and better communications structure in the north," Parnell said.

He added that Alaska would benefit from the improvements for search and rescue operations, oil spill prevention and response and also for economic growth.

While in Nome, Parnell toured the old state office building and different potential locations. "I heard concerns to keep the state office building on Front Street," said Par-

"Right now, we are looking at where is should be, whether or not the existing structure should be renovated and to weigh all the different alternatives," he said. "The City and Sitnasuak have done work to evaluate that but the state should do its due diligence and we should be complete with that soon.'

While in Nome, Parnell also asked for an update on what the $14 million for the new Richard Foster building has bought so far. "I was told that they are making good progress on the design phase of the project," Parnell said.

The Governor and his wife also received ivory carvings as a thank you for providing funds for the Quyana Care facility from NSHC chairwoman Emily Hughes and board member Berda Willson.

DATA GATHERING—Nome Gold Alaska Corp. punches holes in the tundra between the Teller Highway and CenTER Creek Road. They are drilling core samples to verify the presence of gold.

Nome Gold Alaska firms plans to mine this summer

By Diana Haecker

Nome Gold Alaska Corp., the newly formed corporation that bought 11,500 acres of Alaska Gold patented mining claims last year, is firming up plans to commence mining operations this summer. The parent company is registered in Canada, and has hired a chief executive officer with John Sellar, a mining engineer originally from Australia, to head the operations in Nome.

Sellar's background is in open pit mining of gold, precious metals, uranium and coal. "My task here is to re-commence placer mining operations in a modest way to start with this year," Sellar said in a recent interview with The Nome Nugget. He said that Nome Gold is in the process of confirming old drilling data gathered from drill samples of 7,500 drill holes in the area. Where holes were too far apart, drilling is being done to put additional holes in the ground to shorten up the distances between exploration holes and to confirm old drilling data, Sellar said.

The corporation has been busy all winter exploring at Monroeville, south of the Bessie Pit and northwest of Icy View. A white sock is placed over the exploration drill rig, which can be seen at times from the Nome-Beltz Hwy - and workers plowed snow mixed with soil off the tundra to drive trucks to and from the drill rig. Sellar explained that the drill rig itself is mobile and on tracks, but he also said that trucks are needed to get people and the heavy core samples from the drill rig to the gold shed where the core samples are analyzed. The customary winter trail west of the pole line is no longer accessible due to snow berms and the exploration activity. Exploration will continue in areas that will be mined in the future, Sellar said.

Nome Gold has hired an exploration company called Mettalogeny Inc. out of Fairbanks, which in turn subcontracted with a drilling contractor. They currently employ 10 people during the exploration phase, with four workers being from Nome. In addition, they have four maintenance personnel, none from Nome, but plan to hire a Nomeite in the near future.

As for office personnel, there are two managers, including John Sellar, and two Nome employees, business manager Mitch Erickson and Rusty James. Sellar said that he hopes to expand the office staff to include an administrative assistant and a planning engineer geologist. "The preference is to employ local folks, but we will bring in people if that's not possible," Sellar said.

Sellar expects a work crew of 30 employees for this summer's mining operations. Sellar said that summer mining plans only very recently firmed up. The company applied for an Army Corps of Engineers permit to discharge dredged material and fill material into 20 acres of wetlands. The public comment period on the permit application closed on February 23 and the Army Corps is currently evaluating the comments received. (Editor's note: This comment period was not advertised in the Nugget) Victor Ross with the Army Corps said that it takes about 120 days for the Corps to make its decision. The State Dept. of Environmental Conservation also has to certify the discharge application.

Sellar described the initial operations as being modest in scope. "We are going to be fairly small, operating in three small areas, 24/7, using mostly mechanical equipment," Sellar said. "Then we evaluate how we go and that will allow us to forecast what we do in the succeeding years."

He said that mining operations would start in March by trying to excavate frozen ground in the areas first targeted. The three areas of operation will be the Jail House block, west of the prison. They plan to continue mining in northern Monroeville, south of Camp 5 and below the T Hangar. The third spot to be mined would be the area across from the National Guard Hangar, east of Center Creek Road and south of the City's monofill dump. "All of this would be with mechanical, diesel driven, traditional mining equipment, trucks, front end loaders, dozers, excavators," explained Sellar. Eventually, Sellar said, they would employ the oldest mining method of all and that's hydrolic mining. Mitch Erickson said the company plans to use water from ponds and recycle the water back to the ponds to create a zero discharge operation. "The material will be pumped to some form of screening operation to take out oversize material and the smaller material and the gravels holding the gold will be processed over sluices and maybe a fine gold recovery circuit," explained Sellar. "Tailings will be pumped into tailings area and the water re-circulated to the water ponds." The company plans to operate 24 hours a day, seven days a week during the summer season. Sellar said that the company has acquired a lot of new equipment that is due to arrive with the first barge in Sellar said that the company has no plans to hold public meetings in the immediate future. "We don't have any immediate plans [for a public meeting], no," Sellar said. "One of the reasons is that we have only very recently started to firm up plans anyway. When we have something to talk about, we'll have public meetings for discussion." Asked what the Nome Gold Alaska's policies are in regards to the public using the land, Sellar said that they do not have a policy yet. "We are aware that the public has used the lands before and we are aware that we have some liability, [...] but we will try to accommodate public use of our lands where appropriate," Sellar said. We're not going to allow people to build a house and live in it, but crossing the land for access and other activities, provided it's reasonable, we give it some consideration.'

How about trail use? "I don't have a problem provided people are behaving in a reasonable manner. If people behave in such a way that would cause injury or damage, we have to consider our own liability,"

Nome Gold to open tent city for gold seekers

By Sandra L. Medearis

Miners lured by drama and riches portrayed on television have sent the City administration into a spin with visions of services overwhelmed by those loading e-mail inboxes for information on housing, staging areas and equipment. A multimillion dollar state lease sale of offshore mining areas has added to the worry of gold dredges clogging the harbor, fighting, claim jumping, and pressure on City services. Today, there has not BEEN a lot of help from outside sources that have directly or indirectly contributed to the 2012 gold rush. City fathers and mothers have not yet found a way to tax gold to help defray costs.

But for those who are prepared to rough it like the good ol' days, there will be some relief of housing demand in do-it-yourself accommodations. Last week, Mitch Erickson of Nome Gold Alaska delighted the Nome Planning Commission with news that his company had a place on the tundra near West Beach where the miners could set up camp and work on equipment.

"This is another gold rush. We're trying to make it easy," Erickson said. "We're trying to get them out of town and out there amongst themselves."

The only other public campground is at Salmon Lake north of Nome. NGA, and Sitnasuak, King Island and Bering Straits Native corporations own land surrounding Nome.

Commissioners applauded the campground proposal, commenting that they had hoped people from private business would pick up the ball for helping to provide services for the afflicted—those arriving with advanced cases of gold fever.

Planners said they saw no problem with recreational use of the land, but that campers would have to check with the Nome Planning Commission for conditional uses before building dwellings or setting up Connex shipping containers.

"We are proposing an industrial campsite west of the Dredge 6 area on 150 acres of mined property," Erickson told the NPC at a meeting March 6. The camp would open in May or June and close in mid-October. "The lot size will be based on the demand, anywhere FROM 100 feet by 100 feet for tent space. We will run it ourselves or lease it out."

Erickson came to the planning meeting to seek guidance and to run the camp idea by commissioners. The Dredge 6 camping area on offer could look like the gold rush tent city postcards from 1900.

Tents—wall tents, spike tents, pup tents will be OK, as will shipping containers converted to dwellings. People will be welcome to bring their dredges up to work on them and putter around when bad weather empties the seascape of mining rigs.

"I had one guy contact me about putting in three 5th wheel trailers and a work shed," Erickson told commissioners.

However, Erickson put his boot down hard on one type of dwelling.

"We are not going to have anything built of blue tarp and pallets—no shacks like the ones currently at West Beach," he declared. Erickson said the days of the shack city along the beach west of Port of Nome are numbered.

"Ultimately I want to clean up the beach and haul off all the old cars during cleanup week this spring," Erickson said.

There will not be electric power available at the camp, but vendors have approached him to offer showers, food and other services. NGA plans to provide portable restrooms and garbage cans. Monitors will be

Access from town would be via Lindbloom Avenue past the state trailers south of the Nome Airport. From the camp, a private road owned by the company would take dredgers to the water at the West Beach public recreational mining area offshore.

Along with the camping permit would come a beach mining permit for land owned by Nome Gold Alaska on West Beach. Another recreational offshore mining area lies off East Beach, looking off East Front Street and extending to Beam Road. The West Offshore and East Offshore recreational mining areas are the only areas where one is able to do recreational mining with a suction dredge. No commercial mining is allowed. Commercial miners are diving over privately owned claims and leases.

Sitnasuak Native Corp. owns the beach, including the ruby and black sands sought by beach miners on East Beach, followed by a strip farther east owned by the Leo B. Rasmussen family. East Beach is currently posted with No Trespassing notices forbidding mining activities. Several concerns own West Beach above the mean high water line, including NGA and Gold Prospectors Association of America, a paid gold camping operation.

Nome Gold Alaska has an answer also for prospectors frustrated by the closure of the popular East Beach mining area. NGA has a deal for local and out-of-town small-scale miners who want to shovel into a high-banker or look for color in the pan on the sand above the MHW line without looking over their shoulder for property owners coming to kick them off. NGA will issue season permits for $25 per individual or family to mine on West Beach. Folks who want to mine at area private beaches have been confined theoretically to standing in water below the mean high water line.

Nome Gold Alaska will have monitors also on West Beach. The company is issuing beach permits on a trial basis this season.

"We can respect each other and respect the land," Erickson said Friday. "We can patrol it better with permits." Disorder and trashing the beach this season would close the permit program for next year or raise the price of permits, he added.

Another outfit, Akau Resort, hosted by Betty Krutzsch-Johnson offers rooms at the mining camp near Anvil Creek.

The City is working with the state Dept. of Natural Resources to plan for the increase in mining permits in process and to answer the waves of inquiries from the would-be rich attracted to offshore mining by the Didoes on the Discovery Channel's "Bering Sea Gold."

Kerwin Krause of state DNR has been enclosing a letter with mining applications addressed to "Dear Gold Seeker." In the letter, the state permitting agency warns those heading north that no roads lead to Nome, so they need to find the cost of shipping and transportation. They need to prepare themselves for the cost of living and be prepared "to find very little gold compared to what you'll spend to find it.'

Training to properly and safely run a suction dredge would be wise, the letter notes, "as two untrained miners have died offshore while mining" in past years.

At a recent special meeting of the Nome Common Council, Josie Bahnke, city manager, noted that she has been in contact with some of the offshore miners interested in working with the City Administration and local businesses to form an independent group to puzzle out how the City can deal with increased visitors and mining permits this summer.

Erickson does not expect the Nome Gold Alaska camp to compete with those getting ready to fix up rentals for the onslaught of summer visitors. Most will want more amenable digs, with electricity and other basic amenities, he thinks.

Indeed, local entrepreneurs and businesses have the latchstring out to "mine the miners."

"When you get down to it, everyone has to eat, sleep and sh_t," said one hard-working merchant. "There is going to be opportunity for whomever wants it.

Bahnke III wins Nome-Golovin race

By Diana Haecker

"It was a gnarly ride," succinctly summarized Evan Booth his and probably every other racer's 2012 Nome-Golovin Snowmachine Race experience. Rough trail pretty much ish. "He got me on Golovin Bay, I tried to catch him on the flats [behind Topkok] but I fell off, checking out the tundra and the scenery there," Bahnke jokingly reported. Hitting a rock hard windrow at high speed, he Johnny Bahnke III won the open class and overall in a time of 2 hours 27 minutes and 33 seconds, just 61 seconds ahead of Evan Booth. "We went back and forth a few times," said Bahnke surrounded by family and supporters at the finish line. Planes and helicopters buzzed overhead the sea ice spectacle, adding to the sound of snowmachines racing across the fingot bucked off the machine and fell off. However, Bahnke jumped back in the saddle and gave Booth a good chase. "I was trying to catch him on the road coming back," Bahnke said. He topped out between 110 or 115 mph and said that he felt comfortable doing a "steady 100 mph." He added that his Ski-Doo MXZ 800 handled the bumps pretty well. "The machine didn't miss a beat. The only mistakes were on my part," Bahnke analyzed. "Mistakes like going too fast over bumps, overshooting corners and falling off."

Scary Landing!

By Denise Fernandez 8th grade, Shishmaref

Saturday January 28th, our high school girls basketball team was flying home from Savoonga. We had landed and were almost halfway down the runway, when all of a sudden the left landing gear wheel came off and the plane started to skid on the gear strut. The nose got off the runway and the plane stopped. Everyone was in silence and shock and sat in the plane very still. Doug Hemnes, the district pilot, called flight service to notify them of the incident and Tim Daniels the BSSD airplane mechanic. Dennis Sinnok opened the door and made sure we were okay.

The BSSD plane parked on the Shishmaref runway.

Ken Stenek our AD in Shishmaref and Dennis helped get us off the plane and unloaded our luggage and we went to the school to warm up (it was -30 out). When we got to the school we called our parents to let them know what was going on, then Dennis took us home.

Later that day Tim Daniels flew in by charter to supervise moving the plane off the runway. With the help of school maintenance men, a couple teachers, and airport supervisor Curtis Nayokpuk and his loader, they put a sled under the left gear and pulled the plane to the tarmac.

Tim Daniels came back a few days later with a couple BSSD maintenance men and replaced the landing gear and tested it for a few cycles to make sure it was working properly. They got a special ferry permit to fly the plane to Anchorage to remove the left engine to be inspected because the props struck the runway. They will also have to repair the left wing flap because it was damaged when the wheel hit it when it came off.

Since the plane is out of commission, BSSD travel costs have risen considerably because the travel office has to rely on charters with ERA and Bering Air. Because of this, the Bering Sea Conference tournament was moved from Gambell to Shishmaref (which Shishmaref was next in the tournament rotation) and pulled the plane to the tarmac.

Science of the Color Wheel

By Judy Standafer

In Wales, Ms Standafer's middle school science class has been studying the color wheel. They mixed the primary colors of yellow, blue, and red to make secondary colors of orange, purple, and green. The first trial was putting food color in milk. Mouse paint gel was poured into snack baggies to have fun with and taken home.

Evelyn Oxereok mixes primary and secondary colors to see what she comes up with.

They found that when they mixed different amounts of the primary colors they all ended up with different colors ranging from a very ugly green to purple to brown. When all colors are mixed you get black. Black water-soluble pens (and other colors) were used on filter paper and on coffee filters and either left to soak up water through a pipe cleaner or water was dripped on to show the colors used to make black. As you can see some very interesting things happened. Next, the primary colors were used to make abstract art. What is next???? Wait and see.

Soluble in and water results and abstract art using primary and secondary colors.

Sherrie Crisci, Shawna Keyes, Archie Olanna Jr, Rebecca Tokeinna, and Evelyn Oxereok use soluble pens on filters.

PaperBackSwap.com Gives Books to Koyuk Elementary School

By Erika Schneider

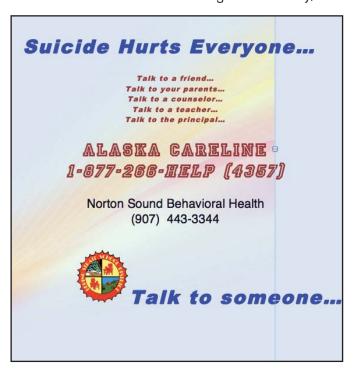

I recently signed our school up to get new books from a book website- PaperBackSwap.com. They sent 500 new books to Koyuk for the students to take home.

The largest Book Club in America, PaperBackSwap.com, recently donated books to Koyuk Elementary School in Koyuk, Alaska. The gift included 500 brand new books which will be placed into the teachers' classroom libraries so that students will have direct access to them or given to the students so that they have books to call their own.

Overall, PaperBackSwap.com's November 2011 Books for Schools program will provide 25,000 books to 27 deserving schools all over the United States from Alaska to Florida. The books will be delivered to the schools just in time to start the New Year off right in January, 2012.

Community Meeting in Shaktoolik

By Larry Cobb

Principal, Shaktoolik

Shaktoolik School had their first meeting with the community on February 14th, 2012 to discuss the approval of the Shaktoolik School construction project. Bering Strait School District will begin construction on Shaktoolik School this summer giving the school a new look, feel, and design. Many questions were answered and more were asked.

Outside Shaktoolik's Vo-Tech Building that was inspected by Bob Dickens

Bob Dickens was helpful in explaining the process and the possible time table of events. Shaktoolik School staff and students are excited and looking forward to having the facelift on the school.

Student Attendance

By Carl White

The latest research is out! Attendance in school significantly impacts student achievement, graduation rates and state test results. Data indicate that missing more than five days of school each year, regardless of the cause, begins to impact student academic performance and starts shaping attitudes about school.

Excused and unexcused absences have similar impact on student academic performance. We now have the data that show that higher absenteeism, no matter the cause, negatively impacts student achievement and academic performance. It is important for students to be at school every day... ready to learn!

White Mountain Excels in Battle of the Books

By Clint Schultz

The White Mountain Wolves have another great reason to be excited about their students' performance this year. This last week the White Mountain Wolves and their coaches came in first place for the local BSSD Battle of the Books competition. Grades 3-12th competed against other schools in the district, answering questions from their list of Battle of the Book readings. This year's school wide win is a great accomplishment for the White Mountain School.

White Mountain Wolves BSSD Battle of the Books scores:

3-4th grade: 72 pts 5-6th grade: 96 pts 7-8th grade: 96 pts 9-12th grade: 96 pts

White Mountain students proudly display their books as they have had recent success in the Battle of the Books.

It has been many years since White Mountain has been able to pull away with a school wide victory. I would like to congratulate all of the students who put hours and hours of time reading their books and preparing for the Battle of the Books competition.

White Mountain students are currently preparing for their next competition representing BSSD at the statewide Battle, starting February 27th and running to March 1st. Good luck Wolves!

Boxing in Gambell

By Kathie Klunder

Recently in Gambell, AK on St. Lawrence Island, 35 miles off the coast of Russia, I (Robert McCoy) started a boxing team. I have been boxing since 2001 and it has always been a dream of mine to start my own boxing team and eventually open up my own gym.

I came to Gambell in May 2011 and spent 2 months here. One of the problems I noticed was overexposure of negative influences to the youth, due to lack of entertainment or activities. Because my family, the Apangalooks from my mom's side, originates from here, I was pressed to try and make a change and provide a positive influence for our youth and our future.

Gambell students practice boxing moves.

I returned to Gambell in November 2011 with plans of making an impact. My first week back I began working as a subsitute teacher at the Hugo T. Apatiki Elementary/John Apangalook Memorial High School. After about a month of subbing, I landed a full time position at the Kawerak Head Start. In December, I began wondering if this place where my ancestors come from could be where I can pursue my dream.

So I started asking and conversing with the people in the village whom are highly respected and great leaders about my plans and my dreams. All were supportive of my plans to make an impact with our youth through boxing as long as it was done so with the right guidance and encouragement.

Robert is doing some one-on-one coaching.

I began my process of starting the first Alaskan rural boxing team by collecting letters of recommendation from three highly respected members of the community. I then wrote a letter myself, explaining my plans and

After all letters were in order, I started collecting signatures from the community who supported my proposal and I gathered six pages full! I brought all of my paperwork to the school and requested permission to use the school facilities for our practices.

Student boxers work out to physically prepare themselves.

Since most of the school staff, including both the principal and the assistant principal, also supported my proposal, I had no problem getting approved. With help from DebForkner(theschool principal) and Kathy Klunder(the schools SFA facilitator) I was able to acquire a grant through a program called 21st Century.

21st Century is an amazing program which supports after school programs. With the grant comes responsibilities of a required 20 min of reading and response which we do together at the end of practice. I then made plans for our first meeting and our first practice.

Every week I do lesson plans for upcoming practices to be prepared. During and after practices I track every students progress and try to get some one-on-one time with each student. I explained to my students that we were not only going to be learning boxing, but along with it we would also be learning self control, self discipline, history, nutritional information, and most of all, to have fun together.

I explained that I started this program to redirect them from getting into trouble and to build confidence in themselves to be great leaders in the community which they all have potential to be.

With reality setting in after our first official meeting, I realized all the responsibilities I brought on. I have many plans for our unique boxing team and I am determined not to let them down. I also told them we would have to work for everything that we receive and nothing would go unearned. All of my students so far, into our third week, have shown a great deal of interest with over 15 members.

With all the support from the community and my students, it has brought a great deal of optimism to our boxing team's future and we cannot help but to be filled with excitement and happiness. I, without a doubt, believe that with some hard work, dedication, teamwork and persistance, the sky is the limit for our "Sivuqaq Sweet Science" boxers.

The only thing our team lacks so far is funding which we are seeking through donations and fundraising. We are having our first fundraising event on Sunday February 19 through a spaghetti feed. I made the first donation by supplying all the food necessary to have our spaghetti feed. I informed my students that we were gonna have to work to earn our equipment and gear as it was not already all available for us.

All my students are more then willing to help with fundraising because they understand that we are gonna have to earn all our equipment required for experience and growth in boxing. I would love to thank the great community of Gambell (my new home) for helping me make my dreams come true and I encourage all not to give up on their dreams.

"The boxing program has inspired me to try harder in life and has given me something to look forward to here in Gambell."

"The horror! The horror!" Kurtz's dying words in The Heart of Darkness may have been echoing in students' minds last week as they completed a battery of 7 tests, 1 timed essay and 2 interview and speech events at this year's Academic Decathlon tournament in Stebbins.

Students plow through another 50 question test.

On January 30 and 31, 28 Bering Strait students met in Stebbins to compete in ten academic categories, all having to do with the Age of Empire. The Academic Decathlon is an annual high school academic competition organized by the non-profit United States Academic Decathlon Association.

The fearsome superquiz relay!

Even though students realize they are competitors, there is a high level of camaraderie in the Decathlon. "I'm so nervous!" one student confessed to a competitor as she paced outside the room where she would give her speech.

"Make sure you speak up," she was advised. "You'll be fine!" they assure each other as they wait for their scheduled time shake the interviewer's hand!"

The competition consists of seven multiple-choice tests, two performance events, and an essay. The ten events require knowledge in many academic disciplines, as well as reading a complex novel—this year's choice was The Heart of Darkness. It sounds very dry, but decathletes describe the two day event as "intense", "fun," and "surprisingly exciting."

BSSD State Team

Students complete 50 question tests in 30 minutes. The seven tests are in art, economics, language and literature, math, music, science and social science.

The relay event-known as the "Super Quiz" –is a multiple choice final event. These topics, with the exception of math, are thematically linked each year. Previous topics have included The Great Depression, The French Revolution, Latin America, and the Civil War.

Students spent months studying the art, music, social science, math, economics, literature and science of Imperialism in order to compete for gold, sliver and bronze medals in each competitive category.

The top three decathletes in each category – Honors, Scholastic, and Varsity–will travel to Anchorage in February to compete in State Academic Decathlon:

Shishmaref: Nellie Okpowruk, Alan Kuzuguk

Unalakleet: Svea Southall,, Talon Erickson, Laurel Katchatag

Golovin: Charlie Ningeulook

Stebbins: Corrina Odinzoff, Mariah Washington, and Camille Katcheak

Now the students have one question themselves: what's next year's topic?

Character Based Literacy

(aka: C.B.L.)

Megan Gibb conducts a CBL lesson with students in Savoonga.

Awakening authentic interest, creating deeper understanding, sparking passionate opinions:

The Unification of Social Studies with Language Arts

C.B.L. THEMES POSITIVE CHARACTER TRAITS

I) RESPONSIBILITY REQUIRES ACTION

Responsibility: the active side of morality--doing what I should, doing what I say, doing what is best for all, doing the one thing I should be doing, right now.

2) CHANGE REQUIRES EFFORT

Change requires: a vision, a plan, and effort. Changing bad habits to good, effort when I don't feel like it, taking one step at a time.

3) JUSTICE REQUIRES RESTRAINT

There are things I can not say or do to myself, others, or the planet--my decisions and actions must respect the rights of all. Help, not hurt.

4) COURAGE REQUIRES MODERATION

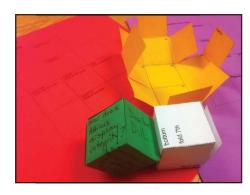

Courage: risk for a reason, not a thrill. I moderate impulses and emotions. I consider the heroic journey in which people live for purposes bigger than themselves, their wants, and needs.

5) INTEGRITY REQUIRES WHOLENESS

Integrity requires I live my life whole, entire, sound, coherent, and principled. Integrity moves me to do difficult and new things, not just easy and accustomed things.

Character Based Literacy was originally developed for alternative schools throughout California where underprivileged students are impacted by many of the same social stresses faced by those in our region. BSSD superintendent Rob Picou had familiarity with this program from his days as an educator in New Orleans, where Character Based Literacy was also finding success. He perceived a program like this might cause our young people to better understand the role Character plays in the lives of successful members of society (see inset at left). Happily, Picou's vision dovetailed with those of BSSD Curriculum-and-Instruction Director, Ben Howard. Howard was convinced the key to deeper and more authentic understanding of historic events was to create a "parallel curriculum" between social studies and literature. He wanted to build a dual curriculum in which students would get the basic facts about a particular point in history from their social studies teacher and then live vicariously in that time and place and experience the conflicts (and the resolution of those conflicts) that mattered then through the stories told in their literacy class. The results now emerge as BSSD teachers and students endeavor to better understand the world we live in, coupling raw information with human experience, all the while examining each situation for evidence of exemplary human character.

A "cubing activity" to help cause students to look deeper into the literature they are reading.

Report from the Classroom

Veteran BSSD high school humanities teacher, Karen Beranek, (Stebbins) recently observed: "I'm not sure why the kids are willing to discuss more with C.B.L., but they are. They take me to task on certain points. They were writing their Leadership Requires Engagement papers today (in one class period, no less!) and many were pondering how to write their conclusions--one student said, 'You know, when I started this paper, I thought Sara was a leader engaged in her community. Now that I've written it out, I don't think she is.' (And she went back and changed her introduction to reflect that!). Perhaps it's because they feel more empowered with the History background they receive in Social Studies,. Whatever the reason--they are discussing [and writing] more."

Deep Alignment

WHAT IS DEEP CURRICULUM ALIGNMENT?

Curriculum Resource Guides
Each BSSD curriculum resource will have an alignment guide to help teachers identify key instructional strategies, SBA assessment focus, state standards, level of mastery, and extension activities.

The deep-alignment process is designed to examine instructional materials and unit/lesson planning to ensure that what is being taught is aligned directly and appropriately with what students will be assessed for on state standardized testing prior to the testing event. This process is not intended to encourage "teaching to the test" or "watering down" the curriculum.

It is intended to ensure that the time teachers spend on instruction is most efficiently organized in such a way that materials directly related to the grade level expectation (GLEs) tested for are delivered prior to testing. [As of the fall 2012, GLEs will be revised to new State Standards]. Students can then be familiar with what they will be asked to demonstrate an understanding of. Materials that do not directly relate to the GLEs, but are nonetheless important information for extension or to introduce upcoming concepts in the next grade level, are easily switched within the resulting pacing guide such that they are taught after the testing event.

The effort to align BSSD curriculum resources is a result of a leading Phi Delta Kappa curriculum management audit finding. BSSD continues to review key findings to improve educational services for students.

Response To Instruction/Intervention

Information for Parents From Superintendent Rob Picou

Coming Together Around the Needs of Children

What is Response to Intervention?

Parents want to see their child excel, and it can be very frustrating if a child falls behind in reading, math, writing, or other subjects, or if the child has difficulty getting along with others or making appropriate choices.

Response to Intervention (RtI) is a process that provides intervention and educational support to all students at increasing levels of intensity based on their individual needs. The goal is to prevent problems and intervene early so that students can be successful.

If your child struggles with learning, what can you expect with Rtl?

- You will be informed and involved in planning and providing interventions for your child.
- You will see levels of support (academic and behavioral) that increase or decrease depending on your child's needs.
- You will receive frequent progress monitoring about how your child responds to the intervention provided.

What Does Rtl Look Like?

The Rtl process has three tiers that build upon each other. Each tier provides more intensive levels of support:

- Tier I includes high quality instruction. The school provides all students with access to high quality curriculum, instruction, and behavior supports in the general education classroom.
- Tier II includes additional targeted instruction/interventions.

 The school provides interventions to small groups of students who need more support than they are receiving through Tier I.
- Tier III includes intensive interventions. The school develops and implements interventions to meet the individual needs of students.

Your child's progress is monitored and results are used to make decisions about additional instruction and intervention.

StraitTalk is a Bering Strait School District publication Printed by the Nome Nugget Patrick Cutler, Editor, poutler@bssd.org

Register for an account and contribute to future editions by posting to http://blog.bssd.org/

Rtl Includes:

- High Quality, research-based instructional and behavior supports in general education.
- School-wide screening to determine which students need closer monitoring or additional interventions.
- 3. Multiple tiers of increasingly intense, research-based interventions matched to the needs of student(s).
- 4. Use of collaborative problem solving to develop, implement, and monitor interventions.
- Continuous monitoring of student progress to determine if instruction/interventions are effective in meeting the needs of students(s).
- Follow-up to ensure that the instruction/interventions were implemented as planned.
- Active parent involvement throughout the process of pursuing solutions that lead to increased success.
- Evaluation timeline requirements are followed unless both parents and the school team agree to a time extension to learn more about what works for the student.

race. West just came off a secondplace Iron Dog finish with his partner Tyler Huntington. He said that he blew a shock on his Polaris Switchback 600 near Timber and had a pretty rough ride back to Nome. Last year's open class winner Jarvis Miller started in the B class and said the trail was riddled with holes and bumps. From Nome to Safety, he said, he could run his Polaris Switchback 600 wide open. "At one time I was going 100 mph, then I quit looking," he said.

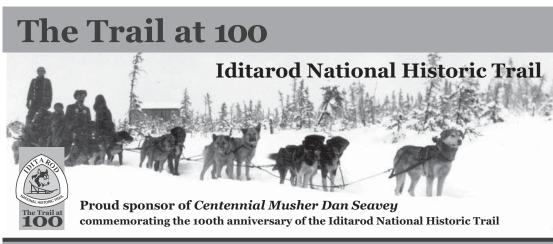

Even before the race started, riders knew it wouldn't be a smooth magic carpet ride. Race committee president Andrew Peterson appealed to the racers prior to starting that they should exercise caution and to strive for good sportsmanship and help fellow riders if misfortune befalls them. Luckily, no major collisions were reported and only minor injuries happened as riders crashed into boulders that wreaked havoc with machines, but left bones un-broken. Mike Morgan and Nicholas Reader were among the 13 drivers who scratched.

Morgan bumped into a boulder, rendering his Polaris 600 cc sled useless and he couldn't ride his machine back. Nicholas Reader was present at the finish line, disappointed and sore from a wipeout caused by his machine also hitting a rock, but otherwise unharmed.

Dickie Moto Jr. won the fan cooled class in 2 hours 54 minutes and 47 seconds. Kotzebue's Quinn Schaeffer took second place in 3 hours, 5 minutes and 50 seconds. Joseph Fagundes won third place in 3 hours, 9 minutes and 25 seconds. Five ladies started in the D class, racing a course from Nome to Solomon and back. Dora Hughes won the race, in 1 hour, 2 minutes and four seconds. Marlene Saccheus came in second in 1 hour 5 minutes and 41 seconds. Sidney Mitchell rounded out the top three in 1 hour, 8 minutes and 41 seconds. Samantha Harris-Richards scratched from the race. The race attracted snowmachine riders from Kotzebue, St. Lawrence Island, Anchorage, Selawik and Elim.

BACK IN THE SADDLE AGAIN—Mike Morgan of Nome had to scratch in the Nome-Golovin race due to hitting a boulder. Morgan finished this years 2000 mile long Irondog snowmachine race in 4th place.

Dear Chairman and Board Members,

On behalf of the residents of our community, we gratefully acknowledge and thank you for recently making much-needed assistance available through the implementation of the NSEDC 2012 Energy Assistance Subsidy Program. As you have recognized, basic energy costs, both heating fuel and electricity, are taking a bigger piece out of the disposable income of each household in our region. This is especially true this winter, where we have experienced severe record-breaking temperatures and an increase in the cost of fuel, further adding to basic living costs.

We appreciate your proactive approach in making an immediate difference through the assistance directed to each of our households. And, we also recognize your contributions toward energy efficiency projects which can assist communities by reducing their energy consumption. We will continue to advocate for affordable energy for our region, and thank you for your support in these endeavors.

Haiti's New Threat: Diabetes

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Emmanuel Josephine (not her real name), a middle-aged Haitian woman with the distinctive leathered skin, rough hands, and dark eyes of someone who grew up in a harsh coastal environment. sat on a splintered bench before me in an upper room of a concrete walled church building in the sweltering dust-filled city of Gonaives, Haiti. The fact that she was my first patient of the day is somewhat puzzling. Medical relief clinics in the developing world are often a lesson in chaos. People deprived of medical or dental care are often forced to fight with neighbors over the one opportunity to see a provider for perhaps months or years. The first people in line are usually those with the strength and health to push their way to the front. But Josephine was not strong. She could barely see. She was obese by Haitian standards. She had a constant burning sensation in her feet, and she suffered from constant headaches

Audrey, my daughter, on her first mission trip to Haiti, looked up from the cuff she was using to check Josephine's blood pressure. "It's really high, Dad." I rechecked to verify the presence of stage II hypertension.

Josephine then said something eerily out of place, "I make sugar." Translated from Haitian Creole this means, "I have diabetes."

Stephen Wagner, a medical student from Arkansas, checked her blood sugar. The reading was over 350. She had seen the Haitian doctors and surprisingly knew a lot about her disease. But she had little money for medication or a glucose meter. Furthermore, insulin, which Josephine needs badly, requires refrigeration. Refrigeration is dependent on electricity or at least a supply of ice, neither of which is reliably available to the poor in Haiti. So Josephine, like a child looking through the glass front window of a toy store, spent her life peering through a barrier to medical care that she could not afford to access.

I was in Haiti the first week of March as part of an effort to provide medical and dental relief, distribute eye glasses, and support ongoing development work sponsored by the Haiti Christian Development Project, a non-profit program for the development of self-sustaining community development in Haiti.

Our medical team was comprised of 43 people from across the country, many of whom make this annual trip to Haiti. This year six people journeyed from Nome to join the team. Dr. Mark Kelso took his first trip to Haiti with his children, Ethan (age 14) and Katie (age 12). My son Degnan (age 14) went on his third trip to Haiti, and my daughter Audrey (age 11) went for the first time. During the week we learned that

Josephine's predicament is not unique. Dia-ALASKA betes and, more frequently, its FAMILY precursors hypertension and obesity, are increasingly seen

in clinics held in both urban and rural relief clinics in Haiti. In fact, throughout the world the number of people with diabetes is increasing exponentially, rapidly overtaking AIDS and Cancer as a worldwide killer. The poor in underdeveloped nations bear the greatest weight of this new burden.

Life is already hard in Haiti. Disease, malnutrition, overcrowding, and a lack of clean water or medical care form a backdrop to the daily lives of people caught in the fallout of a tragic story that started over two centuries ago. Despite a successful slave-led revolution for independence against the French (1791-1804), a feat for which Haiti still holds the title of "first," the Haitian people remain largely trapped by political oppression, social upheaval, and rampant disease. Massive earthquakes, as in 2010, and the annual threat of flooding from hurricanes and tropical storms serve merely as punctuation marks in a long list of tragic events that make up the history of this once-lush tropical island nation. Now there are signs that the devastating effects of diabetes will become one of the next catastrophic challenges for Haiti.

Diabetes, unlike infectious diseases that can be treated with a course of antibiotics, requires lifelong education, monitoring, and medication. In the U.S., a person with type II diabetes typically spends an average of $13,500 per year to manage the disease. That is more than many Haitians would make in over 30 years of work. Some patients acquire donated supplies, though only intermittently.

But using donated meters and medication is not always the right solution. Relief doctors occasionally provide long-term medications to people with hypertension or diabetes in Haiti, but they are always reluctant to do so unless they know there will be good follow up and monitoring to ensure that the attempts to help do not result in harm.

In some parts of the world, people do not know about diabetes or how to prevent it. Death from this lack of knowledge is unfortunate, though understandable. On the other hand, people in wealthy nations may have the means and education to treat diabetes but too often ignore what they know about the disease and its prevention or, worse, take for granted the fact that therapy is readily available and put off treatment until it is

By Pastor Julie Yoder Elmore A Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

Lent is time of year when we take time to look inside ourselves at what might be standing in our way from a deeper relationship with God. Through this process, we have the opportunity to see God in new and fresh ways and repent of those things that distract us from living our lives for God. This journey may not be easy, but it is necessary. Jesus' journey to the cross was not easy, but was necessary. He made this journey because he loves us so much and had a strong desire to reconcile God and humanity once and for all. Jesus' motivation to do what he did was love. What is our motivation to do what we do? Is it for ourselves or for God?

Matthew 6:1-6, 16-21 focuses on three spiritual disciplines – giving alms, prayer, and fasting – as well as Jesus instructing that we are to build up our treasures in heaven, instead of being concerned about building up treasures in this world. In other words, we are to focus on those things that last beyond this world, those things that are important to God. Spiritual disciplines are meant to bring us closer to God, as we make ourselves available to experience God in new and fresh ways.

The giving of alms is not just about giving money to the poor, but is also about what Jesus talks about in Matthew 25 when he tells us to feed the hungry, bring drink to the thirsty, welcome the stranger, clothe the naked, and visit the sick and those in prison. When we do for the least of these, we are doing for Jesus. Additionally, prayer is not about us, but about a conversation with God. We deepen our relationship with God as we share an intimate time with God as we bring our concerns, joys, praises, and thanksgiving to God. Fasting is where we give something up such as watching TV that distracts us from spending time with God. When fasting, we totally rely on God to sustain us through this time.

As we examine our motivations for our spiritual disciplines and discover that we have been doing them to impress others, we are in need of forgiveness. God is always ready with open arms, ready to forgive. As we repent of our sin of selfishness, we turn away from focusing on ourselves and turn toward focusing on God, who loves us so much that God gave us God's only Son who journeyed to the cross so that we would be made right with God once and for all. Jesus focused on his love for us. As we keep our focus on God throughout this journey, we will deepen our relationship with God and be more like Christ in our thoughts, words, and actions.

too late. Death from such apathy is hard to excuse.

Still many people in developing parts of the world know about diabetes and are willing to treat it, but they do not have the means to do so. Having so little to offer a patient who truly cares about his or her problem breaks this doctor's heart. It is hard to look into the dark eyes of a patient who knows his or her disease and has an eager desire to keep it under tight control, but has no means to pay for monitoring or even afford the least expensive of medications. Though type II diabetes is preventable with a change in diet, daily activity, and moderate weight-reduction, too often we arrive on the scene too late, even for this most basic education.

Josephine received medication for her pain. But we were unable to provide her with medication for the true underlying causes of her pain. We just had no way to ensure she could take the regimen safely.

Unfortunately, this type of scenario was seen repeatedly by our medical team and I am sure is seen by providers in thousands of encounters throughout modern Haiti. I personally saw dozens of patients with diabetes or pre-diabetes in one short week in Haiti. Twenty years ago, on my first trip to Haiti, I only remember seeing one person with diabetes.

But hope is not lost. On the bus ride back to the airport on our last day in Haiti, one of our group's translators, a slightly overweight college student from Port-au-Prince, leaned over and said to me, "I heard you tell how to lose weight to protect a person from diabetes. Can you tell me how to do this?"

Perhaps, for her and her generation, it is not too late.

Unalakleet State Troopers received a report of a vehicle that was on fire on the Old Dump Road in Unalakiest. Investigation revealed, someone(s) stole a Unalakiest Police Department Police Vehicle and drove it to the Old Dump Road where they intentionally set it on fire. One of the persons involved walked away from the scene onto the icy of the Norton Sound and walked for approximately three miles until he passed out due to alcohol consumption. He was discovered to be suffering the effects of hyperthermia. He was immediately transported to the Unalakleet Health Clinic were he received medical treatment. He was later re-leased from the clinic with no other reported injuries. AST does have suspects for this case and upon completion of investigation they will be charged with vehicle theft in the first degree, Arson in the first degree and Criminal Mischief in the first degree. Suspect's names and further information pertaining to this case is being withheld due to ongoing investigation. Dogs march up the coast said that he is in a good position to strike at the number one spot, but he also knows that anything can change at the drop of a hat. "I arrived in Unalakleet in second place during the 2009 race," Burmeister said. "But then a storm hit and changed the set up of the race entirely. Anything can happen. I just try to keep my dogs strong and do the best we can do,' Burmeister said. He arrived with 15 dogs and dropped one dog at the checkpoint.

Baker, surrounded by family members and supporters, said that the run from Kaltag to Unalakleet had been real slow, and really, really cold. Regardless of the fact that Baker was still up there running in the top four and having a dog team that moved at a steady clip, reporters badgered Baker about the hold-up.

"They are not the team that we had here last year," Baker said. "But they're doing fine." The team consists mostly of the same dogs that won Baker the championship last year. So what's the difference? "They just don't seem to have the speed of the team last year," Baker answered. "But they'll be fine."

Baker said he'd been reacting and that he didn't stick to his plan so well, but he didn't seem to be bothered too much by it. He rested for five and a half hours before feeding them. Baker has a unique Kotzebue way of putting booties on the dogs, by kneeling down, turning the dogs on the back and slipping the booties over the paws and they almost look like they continue to sleep while getting dressed for the next leg of their

that he thought it had been the best trail the Iditarod ever had. "It was all smoothed out, a soft trail, good for our dogs," Baker said. Mark Nordman reported that between Cripple and Ruby there was lots of snow and the trail down the Steps descending to the Happy River had been the best ever due to the huge amount of snow.

What morphed into a contentious issue before the race started had been sorted out by nature. Nordman said that early on, the Iditarod eyed an alternative route to circumvent the perennial challenge of the "Steps." A new winter access road had been established to reach a mining prospect and prior to a huge snowfall in February, Nordman said it looked like a good alternative to the Steps. Race officials planned to use the mining road instead of the Steps, until Nordman got word from the trailblazers on the day of the ceremonial race start that the Steps looked perfect and that the new mining road didn't look so appealing anymore as snowdrifts turned the route into a 1,000yard side-hilling nightmare. So, down the Steps the race went, and nobody seemed to have a problem. "The section between Rainy Pass and Finger Lake was a cake walk this year," said Nordman.

As the first four mushers tried to keep a poker face, they did watch closely as a second wave of mushers came into Unalakleet. Everybody was expecting Jeff King, but a race official informed the crowd inside the checkpoint that he had been stopped for over an hour 11 miles out of Unalakleet. Asked about King, Ray Redington who just pulled off the trail, said, "He's done." Mitch Seavey arrived in Unalakleet, sitting on his sled, looking cold and tired. Ray Redington followed, then a very spunky looking team driven by Jake Berkowitz loped in. Hot on Berkowitz' heels came Pete Kaiser with a nice moving team. Berkowitz immediately asked for Nordman, indicating that something was wrong. The musher tended to his dogs, bedded them on straw and took booties off, and said that he cut himself with a knife as he had separated some fish snacks for the dogs during rest on the trail. The wound required medical attention and race marshal Mark Nordman later issued a press release that Berkowitz was withdrawn and flown to Anchorage.

By noon Unalakleet checkpoint was hopping as more teams rolled in. Ramey Smyth, a top contender who always seems to fly under the radar, parked his dogs and went about his checkpoint routine, politely asking people to tread lightly around his dogs. Smyth finished last year in second place, also breaking Martin Buser's speed record. Next came Deedee Jonrowe with a good-looking team

Aliy Zirkle had cheerfully entertained the crowd that had gathered around her while she was getting ready to leave Unalakleet. "How is everybody?" she asked the media people and fans around her. She was taking her time to feed the dogs, removing the ice build-up between the sled runners and the cushion a musher stands on and packing up to leave. Her husband Allen Moore said that she has 10 dogs in her team that he raced in the recent Yukon Quest, which he finished 27 seconds behind race winner Hugh Neff. Moore said that the most of the dogs in this team come from a breeding with Lance Mackey's famous dog Zorro, prior to Zorro's rise to stardom.

The dogs were parked between rows of pushed up snow berms on the slough, all resting and sleeping deep sun touched the frosted hairs of the canine athletes. A humongous water cooker let off steam that could be seen for miles, as the belly of the stove was fed with pallet wood and drift wood chunks to heat water for the incoming dog teams.

It was hard to leave the hospitality and coziness of the checkpoint. Aaron Burmeister pulled the hook first and the team only reluctantly left the checkpoint. The same held true for Dallas Seavey's and Aliy Zirkle's departure, which all required that the mushers run up front and straighten out the team as the leaders looked for any excuse to hang a left Fast forward to Koyuk on Monday morning. Dallas Seavey had taken the lead and was already out of Koyuk enroute to Elim, followed by Aliy Zirkle. Seavey ski-poled and kicked while his team ascended a hill and was moving at least a mile ahead of Zirkle.

In Koyuk was John Baker, not sleeping but drinking coffee, giving autographs and talking with teenagers who volunteered as checkpoint helpers. He said he'd give his dogs a couple more hours rest. Ramey Smyth had his dogs bedded down, leaders covered with his parka, the rest of the team tucked in with a variety of blankets to keep them warm and safe from distractions. Smyth again, asked bystanders to speak quietly to allow his dogs to rest. When he pulled out of the checkpoint, they walked out willingly, took a few minutes to answer the call of nature and then trotted out on the sea ice toward Elim. The wind kicked up as the day progressed, visible as charter bush planes from all across Alaska carrying media and race followers literally bounced onto Koyuk's runway.

As of press time on Tuesday morning, the race seemed to be between Aliy Zirkle, following Dallas Seavey. At noon, seven miles were between them. Although the sun smiled down on Nome, a stiff north breeze kicked up and blew loose snow around. In channeled areas, this can make for unpleasant traveling on the last stretch. Will the winner be the first woman in more than 20 years to win the race? Or the third generation musher Dallas Seavey, who at age 25, would be the youngest winner of all?

Red Lantern Banquet wraps trail tales of Iditarod XL

By Diana Haecker

The distinction to extinguish the red Widow's Lantern fell to musher Jan Steves. In honor of the last musher and her companion Bob Chlupach, who crossed the finish line just a few minutes ahead of her, Nome put on a Red Lantern banquet at the Mini Convention Center on Monday evening. This was the first Red Lantern banquet in a while, as the last mushers in the past few years have finished in time for the official awards banquet held on Sunday.

The least formal of all banquets associated with the Iditarod, the Red Lantern crowd feasted on the same dinner served as at the awards banquet and in a more intimate setting at the smaller venue and heard stories of the trail that didn't include thank you speeches to sponsors.

It included tales of amazing northern light displays while dog drivers were mushing their teams through the night, it included harrowing tales of rookie Jan Steves and her partner Bob Chlupach trying to untangle their dog teams while a growling moose lay on the trail. It included Lance Mackey's jokes like "I set myself up to get the most improved musher award next year" and more profound observations of not sweating the small stuff like what place he finishes when he is alive and mushing a dog team in the Last Great Race.

Champion Dallas Seavey spoke about a section in the trail between Shaktoolik and Koyuk, where he was trying to run away from the competition. Looking over his shoulder, he noticed first one, then two, then three lights in the distance, closing in on him. He started ski poling, kicking, running alongside the sled and working up a sweat. And those headlights, still gained on him. He said, he had kissed the thought of winning the Iditarod good-bye, wondering how his competition could move along so quick and effortlessly.

Well, after a while, when collapsing exhausted on his sled, he realized that he was trying to run away from two snowmachines that gained on him and passed him leisurely at 15 mph. "Maybe that extra push gave me the advantage and helped me to put more distance between me and Aliy," Seavey said. His father Mitch, the 2004 Iditarod champion, not as eager to speak in front of a big crowd as his 25-year-old son, said that in this race he finally started to learn how to take care of himself a little bit better. "It's usually all about the dogs, we're on our hands and feet, crawling around the dogs, tending to their feet and needs, but I learned that I can be just as fast and effective taking care of them when I take care of myself," Seavey said.

Mackey, recounting again how his lead dog Maple and her heat cycle interfered with his race, but finding a silver lining in the situation, he said he enjoyed hanging out with a different kind of people in the middle of the pack. That is "until they left me behind!" Mackey said.

He talked about how every dog wanted to breed his Maple along the way and then even a little fox started hanging around the team as it moved through the night. "That little fox was running across the trail in front of us, jumping up and spinning around, coming back and I actually stopped a few times to see how close he would dare to come," Mackey said. The fox continued his antics until Mackey realized, darn it, the little guy put on the show to impress Maple.

Trent Herbst talked about the initial confusion at the start line in Willow, where fans mistook him as Lance Mackey. "They offered me beer, hot dogs, held up signs and cheered me on, until they realized that 'hey, he's not Lance," Herbst said.

more into the budget and yet add some exceptions, like taking the 5 percent sales tax off concessions sold by students to raise money for extracurricular activities.

The City's administration has put a draft ordinance on the Council table with the help and guidance of the City's attorney, Brooks Chandler. The document, backed up by more than 40 pages of details, also holds changes in penalties for those who do not turn in reports and render unto Caesar in a timely manner, including a hefty fine and possible jail time for tax evasion.

City Clerk Vanessa Musich said Monday that the measure would not come up for first reading at the next Council meeting but that Chandler would come to Nome next week for a face-to-face meeting with the administration. Musich foretold that the City would have a public hearing yet to be announced.

The draft ordinance removes the sales tax from services and construction materials for actual use and either consumption or absorption in a construction project for which a building permit has been issued or a construction contract awarded by the state or the state agency, or a subcontract awarded in connection with the project funded under the construction contract.

Letters

Dear Editor,

I wanted to make some comments on the process by which the public brings their concerns about Nome Public Schools to the Board and to school administration. As a Board, we want to hear your concerns and compliments. We have several Board Policies that cover the process of how this should be done. The exact methods about how certain concerns and complaints are received and dealt with are spelled out in our Administrative Regulations: AR 1312.1 PUBLIC COM-CONCERNING PLAINTS SCHOOL PERSONNEL. These policies are in place to ensure everyone has a voice and can be heard. It is our job as School Board members to bring these concerns forward to administrators. I believe all of NPS Board Members are open to hearing the community's concerns and passing them onto our administrators. A link to the full Board Policy Manuel can be found on the Nome Public Web http://www.nomeschools.com/

Now let me talk about what we as a Board can't do: If we receive an anonymous complaint, the Board cannot investigate. The fact that it is anonymous gives the complaint absolutely no standing. Our Board policy reads: "The School Board places trust in its employees and desires to support their actions in such manner that employees are free from unwarranted, spiteful or negative criticism and complaints." We as a board cannot determine if a criticism we receive may be spiteful, or unwarranted, or even true, if it sent to us anonymously. NPS Board Policy 4030 expresses the Board's mandate that no employee shall be discriminated against or harassed for "good faith reporting to the board on a matter of public concern." I also take this further and believe no community member will be discriminated against for good faith reporting.

I also want to say something about the nature of an anonymous letter. An anonymous letter is meant to prejudice others and hurt the good standing of the person it is aimed at. People who believe in what they wish to say, will stand up and be accountable.

Betsy Brennan Nome Public Schools Board Mem-

It's A Wrap

The Red Lantern is in, the Widow's Lantern is doused and Iditarod is wrapped up for 2012. Those of us who have been busy with all the events can now take time to catch our breath and relax, at least for a couple weeks.

The spirit of volunteerism in Nome and the checkpoints along the trail is what makes Iditarod such a success. Basketball, golf, a love of dogs, parades, art shows, craft shows, talent shows and delicious cooking are what give Iditarod its special flavor. It is public employees doing extra shifts, medical personnel working more hours, it's media putting in long hours and volunteers staying the course up and down the trail that make Iditarod a successful event. It is years of experience and planning that make Iditarod happen.

Let's bring Iditarod 2012 to a close with a round of gratitude for the folks whose talent, training and dedication make things happen. Here's looking ahead to Iditarod 2013 $\,-\,$ N.L.M. $\,-\,$

SENATOR DONALD OLSON ULU NEWS - DISTRICT T Alaska Native Language Preservation and Advisory Council

The Alaska State Senate passed a bill last week aimed at protecting and restoring Alaska Native Languages, a bill I sponsored. Senate Bill 130 will establish the Alaska Native Language Preservation and Advisory Council to assess the state of Alaska Native Languages, reevaluate the programs within the state, and make recommendations to the Governor and Legislature to establish new programs or reorganize the current programs.

Alaska Native Languages are threatened by extinction. Indigenous languages are the most critical components in terms or preservation of cultural ideas and traditions and serve as the backbone of all cultural elements. Senate Bill 130 ensures that these important Alaska Native customs continue on.

According to the University of Alaska's Language Center's Population and Speaker Statistics published in 2007, only 22 percent Alaska Natives statewide can speak their native language. More specifically, only 29 percent of the Eskimo Aleut population, less than 2 percent of the Tsimshian and Haida, and less than 5 percent of the Athabascan and Tlingit communities combined are fluent speakers. The Eyak language recently lost its last native fluent speaker.

Of the state's 20 Alaska Native languages, only two (Siberian Yupik in two villages on St. Lawrence Island, and Central Yup'ik in 17 villages in southwestern Alaska) are spoken by children as the first language of the home.

My hope is the advisory council will give effective representation for Alaska Native languages at the state level, which would be a monumental event for many elders who still remember being scolded in school for speaking their first language. This legislation is the most significant piece of legislation affecting Alaska Native languages since 1972 when laws were passed requiring mandatory bilingual education in state-operated schools where children speak Alaska Native languages.

The council would be comprised of endangered language experts from across the state appointed by the governor, plus two non-voting legislators from the bush caucus. Senate Bill 130 now heads to the House Finance Committee for further consideration.

ACMP Update

The latest news is that ACMP initiative did get enough signatures to be put on the ballot this fall. Lieutenant Governor Mead Treadwell certified the citizen initiative to establish an Alaska Coastal Management Program recently. The Division of Elections completed its review of signatures and determined they meet constitutional and statutory requirements for initiative petitions.

However, several rural legislators have been considering bringing the program back and Representative Alan Austerman has taken the lead and has introduced legislation reestablishing the ACMP. House Bill 325 is said to be very similar to the initiative and is awaiting it's first hearing in the House Resources Committee.

Comparing the initiative to the bill, an attorney for the Alaska Legislature, Alpheus Bullard, said that it's entirely possible that a bill, if passed through both bodies of the legislature this session may be considered 'substantially similar' to the ballot initiative possibly eliminating the need for the ballot measure. Moreover, Bullard also added that it's hard to say how the courts would view the question if the initiative wasn't included on the 2012 ballot.

In the past, Alaska courts have dealt with two cases related to the issue of "substantial similarity." It can be difficult to discern whether a new law supplants an initiative, especially if it's as complex as the coastal management program. In contrast, the legislature can also pass a bill that it doesn't intend to be substantially similar, allowing the vote on the initiative to go forward, and let the chips fall where they may.

It is understood, the initiative has language that would include a coastal policy board which would allow local input in evaluating the effectiveness of district coastal management plans. The board would have the authority to approve district plans including plans to address a coastal use or resource of concern as demonstrated by local knowledge or supported by scientific evidence. Last year, there was the controversial debate about the roles of local knowledge and scientific evidence and the affect they would have on coastal policy decisions.

According to a memo from Bullard, drafting a bill that gives greater local control and participation than the former ACMP program did (HB 106), could only help the effort of having it deemed 'substantially similar'. Chairman of the Alaska Sea Party, Bruce Botelho, also leader of the ballot group, suggests the legislature should focus less on the issue of 'substantial similarity' and more on passing 'a good bill.'

Last year, a second special session was called specifically with the hopes of saving the program. Unfortunately it ended with the House rejecting a Senate's version. Both bodies couldn't come to an agreement regarding the idea of scientific evidence trumping local knowledge.

At this point, it's still too early to tell if HB 325 will make it's way through the legislature before session ends in 30 days. Rep. Austerman said his intentions of introducing HB 325 was to get the conversation on the issue going. He acknowledged some lawmakers fear whether the bill is needed or whether the initiative process is the way to go. Govenor Parnell and Rep. Bill Thomas of Haines feels the initiative is the right way to go and letting the people decide.

As the sponsor of the ACMP bill last year and a senator serving our northern coastal communities, I'd like to see the program return, right now, however we are still predicting which strategy is the best route.

Teachers who took the class will help

Nome School Board gets a four-footed visitor

By Kristine McRae

The Nome School Board had a special visitor attend their March 15th meeting. Appropriate for Iditarod week, Sage, a German Shepard and his master, officer Miller of the Nome Police Department demonstrated for the Nome School Board their combined commitment to keep drugs out of Nome. Sage, who is five vears old, was born in Germany and trained in Illinois. He goes everywhere with Miller and is considered a special service animal. Officer Miller attends trainings four times a year with Sage to keep his K-9 certification current. On command, Sage sniffed out and located a suspicious package that Miller had planted for the demonstration. NPS and the Nome Police Department are exploring opportunities to utilize the pair in education units at the schools. Partner in Education Awards

The Nome School Board recognized Norton Sound Health Corporation for sponsoring instructors to teach courses that introduce high school students to various positions in the health field. At the meeting to accept the award were Angie Gorn, Vice President of Operations; Kelly Keyes, of the C.A.M.P. department; and Phil Hofstetter, Director of Audiology. Students earn high school credit for the courses, titled HS 105 and HS 122, and Norton Sound offers summer jobs to students who successfully complete the course.

Hearing of Delegations/Individuals

Lloyd Perrigo, a teacher at the Nome Youth Facility and the grand-parent of NPS students, voiced his concern about losing long-term staff at the district office. Perrigo illuminated the benefits of having the "collective memory" of staff with extended years and experience with the district and suggested to the board that the district attract staff who would like to make a career with Nome Public Schools. Integral to Perrigo's point was his questioning the hiring of an assistant to the superintendent and the changing of the assistant principal position at the high school to a dean of students. In later discussion, the board had similar questions for Superintendent Brawner concerning the possible addition of district administration positions. Brawner clarified that no new positions have been created but that titles and duties have been rearranged. For example, the current HR position is being replaced by the admin assistant position and the replacement of the Assistant Principal position with the Dean of Students position would save the district $27,000. Brawner explained that the Dean of Students would observe and collaborate with teachers but would not directly evaluate them. The principal would still have the responsibility of evaluating teachers and suspending students. Another position switch effective next school year will be the change of the Director of Special Education to the superintendent's duties from that of the elementary school principal. Mr. Brawner will work closely with Sandy Harvey in the administration of his role of SE director.

Health Insurance

Nome Public Schools is looking at a possible switch in health insurance carriers. Superintendent Brawner has been working with a broker from Alaska USA to find the best proposal for the district. With an initial anticipated annual increase of fifteen to thirty-five percent, the district is looking at three alternative carriers after the current carrier. Aetna, indicated an increase of 39%. Of importance to the board members was that the NPS staff retain similar benefits and deductible rates. The broker will meet with the school board at their next work session on March 27 to answer questions and confirm numbers that could save the district up to $100,000.00 in health care costs.

Last year's figures lent structure to the discussion of the Draft Budget for fiscal year 2013. Emphasizing that the document is soft and still a draft, Superintendent Brawner fielded questions from board members about items such as a 10% increase in student travel for sports events, revenues from pull-tab sales, salary increases for certified teachers, and funding for the community schools and library aide positions. Barb Nickels pointed out that 10% increase in student travel, roughly $16,000.00, could fund an aide position, and that the state legislature might rather see that kind of money go into the classroom. The draft budget does include an aide in each of the kindergarten through 4th grade pods and an aid in the 56er pod.

Members of the school board reiterated that it would be helpful to have community members come to the work sessions to ask questions and to comment on the various aspects of the budget that will affect students, teachers, transportation and energy costs.

Reports

Superintendent Mike Brawner detailed the potential involvement of Nome Public Schools in a three-year partnership focused on school improvement and community engagement. Sponsored by the Association of Alaska School Boards, the partnership supports school districts and their local communities in raising student achievement by linking a shared vision for education and youth success with effective practices in the critical areas of governance and leadership, programs and staff, resources, and community. Twenty-seven districts have participated in the partnership since 2001. Sally Rue, Director of the Initiative for Community Engagement will visit Nome on March 6th.

Although he was traveling during the meeting time, high school principal Steve Gast submitted a report that highlighted the success of the Junior High Science Fair in early March. Board president Betsy Brennan concurred that the science fair was impressive and that students and teachers are commended for their hard work. High School students took fourth place in their state division of "Battle of the Books."

In a comprehensive report to the board, elementary school principal Dave Keller presented a number of literacy activities that lend themselves to the Read 90 goal. Among these are the "Leading Quality Literacy Instruction," an Alaska Pacific course focusing on building literacy skills among elementary students.

to disseminate the information to other teachers on how to apply the skills in the classroom. Reading Mastery Trainer Susan Branham returned to NES to conduct two days of intensive training for all instructors using the Reading Mastery program. This year's Battle of the Books saw 90% participation, and statewide the 3rd/4th grade division took eleventh place. First Lady Sandy Parnell visited NES and read books to students in kindergarten and third grade classes. Disability Awareness speaker Taylor Crowe will talk to students on March 30 about his experiences as a target of bullying. Nome spellers packed the house for the annual spelling bee on February eighth. Coached by volunteer Susan Rand, NES students practiced long hours in preparation for the final competition. The third grade winner was Anevay Ambrosiani, with Jessica Noffsker as runner up. Maya Kralik and Haley Osborne took first and second place for the fourth grade. The fifth grade winner was Dawson Evans with Sidney Kineen as runner up, and the sixth grade winners were Katie Kelso in first and Annalise Contreras as the

Besides the exception for goods and services sold by student organizations, there is an exception for raffle tickets licensed with a State of Alaska gaming permit. There is also an exemption for gross receipts from transactions concerning retail sales and rentals of goods and services directly to a municipality, a state or the U.S. government.

The taxing of pull tabs or "rippies" holds keen interest for charities and pulls tab vendors who garner income from gambling. A debate over the past few months has centered on whether the 5 percent sales tax should come out of the share of proceeds shoved across the counting table to charities or from the gross sales. Chandler's opinion on the question: neither way. The people who buy the rippies should dig a little deeper for the coin to add to the price of the little paper games of chance. Sales clerks should dig into the till for change. That's the way state law works, according to Chandler's opinion in a Jan. 18 memo to Josie Bahnke, city manager. There should be no net effect on the money raised by the non-profit.

"In our opinion, pull tab sellers should conform their business practices to comply with the sales tax ordinance even though it is somewhat painful to make change on a $1.05 purchase," Chandler said.

The language in the current ordinance and the amended ordinance requires sales tax to be added to the sales price of the goods or services and "shown separately on invoices, receipts, and other documents of the sale."

A court case from 15 years ago,

Kotzebue v City of Kotzebue, recognizes that a municipality may impose a tax on pull-tab sales or operations, along with state law, according to Chandler.

Currently, the City takes its 5 percent sales tax off the entire amount generated by the sales on a box of pull-tabs. Under an earlier proposed amendment, the city would charge sales tax against the ideal net, the approximate 20 percent that goes to the charity from the sale of each game box. The City is currently realizing annual revenue in the $400,000 range from pull-tab sales tax. Under the new formula, that take would diminish to about $63,000, while the money going to the charity would grow. As a result, charities would no longer receive money from the City at budget time.

It remains to be seen what the pull-tab tax policy will be after the Council adopts the final draft of the amended ordinance.

For delinquencies, the draft ordinance raises the maximum penalty to 15 percent from the previous 10 percent. Also, if adopted, the amended ordinance would raise the interest on the principal amount of the delinquency from 8 percent to 15 percent per annum.

The draft amended ordinance adds a section requiring the city clerk to estimate the tax owed if the seller fails to file a return or the clerk believes information is not accurate. In such case, the seller has 15 days in which to file a written request for a hearing that will occur before the city manager, the city manager's designee who may be a City employee or a private contractor. From there the appeal moves up to City Council, with the burden of proof on the seller, then superior court as provided by state law. The sales tax determined to be due then bears interest starting from when it was originally due.

When the assessor (city clerk or city clerk designee) or agent determines an audit is needed, a shortage of more than $100 owed will make the merchant pay for the auditadded to the interest and penalties. The cost of the audit will not go over $1,000, according to the draft ordinance. The merchant may appeal. In certain circumstances, a seller may file an amended sales tax return with supporting documentation within one year of the original due date. The city clerk must notify the seller in writing whether the amended return is accepted or rejected and the reasons.

The draft ordinance adds a section that makes all returns, reports and information required by the city clerk to be confidential subject to inspection only by employees and agents of the City whose job responsibilities apply to the data, the person submitting the information and persons with authority in writing from the supplier of the returns. However, the public can, according to the City law, inspect the names and addresses of persons holding current sales tax licenses and know whether a holder of a City sales tax license is more that 30 days delinquent in filing a sales tax return or paying sales tax.

The city clerk may also publish the names of sellers delinquent in paying taxes and the amount owed, unless the City has received written notice from a seller establishing that there is a good faith dispute over whether there is a delinquency or the amount owed.

Trying to milk it to the maximum, Herbst put up his hood when a lady ran through knee-deep snow toward him, yelling "Lance, Lance" and handing him a box of Twinkies. However, she too, at the last second realized he's just an imposter and yanked the Twinkies out of his hands with the words "You're not Lance!"

Aaron Burmeister followed up with a tale of holding back his dog team for most of the race. "I must've been passed about 200 times by other teams," Burmeister said. However, when he did pass another team, it was Lance Mackey's and that was a memorable moment, Burmeister said. "He got off the sled, pulled his team off to the side of the trail and let me have a clean pass," Burmeister said. "A true champion showed me how to give the perfect gentleman's pass."

Bob Chlupach ran his first of 11 Iditarod Trail sled dog races in 1977. This year, arriving in 52nd position, he talked about the memories that every trail section and every camping spot holds for him. "I wish every person could experience what it means to run the Iditarod race," Chlupach said. He traveled with his significant other Jan Steves. The two recounted their various adventures on the trail that involved dragging down a steep trail to Farewell Lake, oversleeping despite setting two alarm clocks and accumulating bruises that put the colors of the northern lights to shame, according to Steves. The party came to an end around 9 p.m. and when Iditarod volunteers cleared the tables, the 40th Iditarod came to its end.

13th annual Iditarod Fine Art Show draws local talent

Artists from Nome and surrounding villages competed in the 13th Annual Iditarod Fine Art Show sponsored by the Nome Arts Council. The show was held at Old St. Joseph's Church Monday, March 12 through Saturday the 17th. This year's judges were Elisabeth Emerson of Tacoma, WA, Linnea Baker of Fairbanks and formerly of Nome and Marian Sells of Wellford, SC. They commented that the show gave them a fresh perspective and view of life in Nome and the surrounding area. They loved the variety, intensity and caliber of talent exhibited in the

A reception was held Friday from 5-7 p.m. during which time, the public enjoyed refreshments while admiring the artwork and visiting with the artists. Event organizer, Angela Hansen extended a welcome and thanked those who participated in and helped with the show. Special thanks went to Delores Orman and Lisa Leeper for helping set up the show, Christina Perrigo for typing the artist information cards and to Cheryl Thompson for making the art and craft show possible in Old St. Joe's. Leeper announced the winners as they came forward to accept their prize money and ribbons.

The votes for the People's Choice Award were tallied and this year's winner is "Front Street," a photograph of Nome by Esther Pederson. Three pieces of artwork were donated by Esther Pederson, Karen Olanna and Heidi Hart and the winners were Kristina Eaton, Rachel Stasenko and John Hautman. To end the program, Hansen said it was another outstanding year exhibiting local artwork and encouraged people to begin their showpieces for next year's 14th Annual Iditarod Fine Art Show!

Nanooks take third at State Tournament

By Stephen Palmatier

The 2011-2012 season was one to remember as the Nome Nanooks wrapped it up this past weekend with a third place finish in the 3A State Championships. After what was a disappointing season last year finishing seventh in State, head coach Pat Callahan made sure that his squad was ready for this year's tournament.

"Our goal is to always qualify for the state tournament, and we were able to do that," said Callahan. "We took advantage of our opportunity in an out of bounds play ready before the end of regulation to tie the game for overtime. On the in-bounds pass, Tyler Eide came up with a steal for the Nanooks before getting fouled, eventually hitting a free throw to ice the game.

Eide's steal at the very end of the game defined what the Nanooks have been about all season, defense for the full 32 minutes. Senior Nathan Blandford led the team with 15 points and Eide added 12 to lead the Nanooks.

the tournament once we made it," said Callahan.

In the Nanooks' opening game of the tournament, they were able to come away with an upset victory over the Sitka Wolves, 45-40. Sitka, who were the Southeast Champions were the clear favorite over Nome, but the Nanooks were able to stay right with them throughout the game. At halftime, they held a three point lead, but lost the lead in the third quarter falling behind by 3 entering the final quarter. However, like many games this season, the Nanooks were able to clamp down on defense and hold the Wolves to 7 points in the fourth quarter leading to the victory. In the final seconds of the game, Nome was up three points looking to hold on for the victory as Sitka had

With the win against Sitka, the reward for Nome was being able to play Monroe Catholic in the semifinals, the top team in the state for 3A. Monroe Catholic defeated Grace Christian 75-22 in the game before facing Nome, and it wasn't much better for the Nanooks as they simply were no match for Monroe Catholic, falling 64-27. It did not take long for Nome to fall behind as they trailed 26-9 at halftime. Blandford led the scoring with 12 points and Eide added 11 points. The rest of the team combined for a total of 4 points, in what is a recipe for a loss whether playing in a state tournament or a pick-up game for fun with

GO NANOOKS—Nome Nanook John Smith drives the ball in the game against Monroe Catholic School. Monroe defeated Nome 64-27 in the semifinals. Monroe became the 3A State champion defeating Anchorage Christian (ACS) 47-33 in the championship game. The Nome Nanooks finished in third place, defeating Mt. Edgecumbe 55-40.

Nome put everything they had left out on the court, defeating Mt. Edgecumbe, 55-40. In the opening period, they had a 2 point lead, but by half-time, they began to take control again with their defense, extending their lead by 9. In the third period, it was the same story as Nome put the game out of reach extending the lead to 16. In the third period, the Nanooks scored 13 points, which was as many points as they gave up in the second and third periods com-

The defense was the story, but another story came into play for the team. On what was the final game for seniors Nathan Blandford and Jens Irelan, the game belonged to sophomore center Cass Mattheis as he tied a team high with 14 points on 7-10 shooting from the field along Nanooks in the coming years.

"We knew he was a game-changer defensively. I think next year you will see him improve offensively," said Callahan speaking of Mattheis. "We are a better team with offensive production out of him."

With Blandford and Irelan, two of the top three scorers on the team this year leaving, the production will need to be filled for them by others. If Mattheis, the tallest player on the team, could become a low-post scoring threat, the Nanooks could have a great inside-out duo for the next two years by sophomores Mattheis and Eide.

Of course though, the loss of Blandford will not be an easy one to fill. Blandford was named to the 3A all-tournament team along with the Alaska Coaches Association 3A Sec-be a few weeks ago. After losing to Dillingham in the first game of Regionals, the Nanooks seemed to click the rest of the year winning not only their next two games in Regionals to advance to State, but also winning two of their three games in the State tournament. Callahan and the team deserve all the credit for not letting the Dillingham loss affect them but rather motivating them.

The Nanooks, who finished their season at 23-6, will look to continue their success as a program, beginning with the work of the offseason.

"To me, the offseason starts today," said Callahan joking about his job. "For the kids, it will be about a month, where we will have basketball camps to get them ready."

Golovin Boys and Shishmaref girls make good showing

By Jeffrey Erickson

State basketball tournaments are wonderful events for players, coaches and fans. They are the culmination of countless hours of preparation...of blood, sweat and tears. They are the reward for effort and performance.

The Bering Sea Conference champion Golovin Lynx boys and Shishmaref Northern Lights girls entered the 2012 tournament with different expectations. While both were absolutely committed to doing their level best to bring home state championship, the Lynx were returning for their second year with a glowing record and victories of large program. With an extremely strong lineup featuring Player of the Year John Peterson they knew that they had a target on their back and were one of the favorites. The Northern Lights on the other hand had not been to the state tournament in many years and were a young team, with several 8th graders.

Both teams started off with impressive wins. Shishmaref came back from to eke out a 54-50 victory over favored Kiana Lynx squad with strong performances from Emma Weyiouanna (16pts/8rebs), Denise Fernandez (14pts/6rebs) and Renee Kuzuguk (13pts/7rebs). Golovin showed it deserved its rep as a title threat with a solid win over a worthy Kiana Lynx squad. Peterson scored 32 and Thomas Amaktoolik chipped in with a "double/double" with 12 points and 11 rebounds.

Youth and a formidable opponent in the Chefornak Shamans combined to make a difficult second round game for the Northern Lights. Porous defense and turnovers were the downfall in a 66-36 loss. In the boys semi-finals it looked early like it would be a blowout with the Lynx jumping to a 19-6 first quarter lead. However, with Peterson spraining his ankle and sitting out much of the second quarter, the Nunamiut Amaguqs regrouped and the game became a battle. Peterson returned to play but counted Amaktoolik on (17pts/13rebs) and Casey Sherman (26pts) to carry the load. Golovin emerged with a 65-57 win and a tri to the finals.

Shishmaref returned to the court on Saturday trying to grab the third place game versus a strong Fort Yukon team led by two time 1A Player of the Year Kandace Carroll. The lead Eagle left no question about her qualifications as she recorded a triple double (30pts/18rebs/10asst) as she led her team to an easy 60-29 victory.

The 1A boy's championship featured a clash of styles with Golovin's athletic team facing a slower, but more disciplined team from Newhalen. The game was even except for the second quarter when turnovers and sloppy play combined with some strong outside shooting by the Malamutes resulted in their 49-36 lead. Golovin made runs in the second but could never overcome that deficit and fell 91-79.

The Lynx were recognized as the top boy's Academic team and placed Peterson, Amaktoolik and Sherman on the All-Tournament team.

Great Northwest Tourney a friendly rivalry reclassified

By Jeffrey Erickson

High school basketball in northwest Alaska is part of the fiber of our lives. It offers competition and opportunities to show physical and mental skills. It brings old friends together and creates many new lifetime relationships. We look forward to the games, but mostly the end of season tournaments where champions are crowned and legends are made. Tales of buzzer-beating baskets and great offensive and defensive performances will be told and retold for years after the games are played.

The 2012 Great Northwest Tournament was even more special as it would be the last time that friendly rivals from Noorvik, Buckland, Noatak and Stebbins would butt heads with the other conference teams. Starting next year these four schools would be returning to the 1A classification and other conferences. Dubbed "The End of an Era", this tournament promised to showcase the talents of each team as they vied for the last championship for this group of teams.

The girls tournament would run as per normal with a champion crowned and a second place team also getting a state tournament berth. The boys, however, would only send a champion since the second berth would come from Yukon/Kuskokwim conference as dictated by Region 1 decision. Every team felt that they had the opportunity in as even a tournament field as anyone had seen in many years.

The first boys' game Wednesday night was indicative of how the tournament would go. The Buckland Sissuani and Pt. Hope Harpooners battled for every point in a slugfest that only ended when Buckland's Nathan Hadley bombed 8 shots from behind the three point line, with six in a row late in the game to lift the Sissuani to a win.

tournament The continued through Thursday and Friday with teams leaving it all on the floor. Great individual and team efforts were cheered by large crowds as the hierarchy of teams began to unfold. It became clear that the regular season record of the Pt. Hope Harpoonerettes was no aberration—they were good and the others were probably fighting for second place and the lower state berth. The boys was still wide open as Buckland, Noatak, Unalakleet, Noorvik and a peaking Pt. Hope team that had finished a disappointing season, all figured to have the firepower to threaten for the single state berth.

The top two seeds in the boys bracket ran into each other Friday and the hometown Unalakleet Wolfpack came out on fire, leading the top seeded Noorvik Bears 38-24 at halftime. The second half turned into a brilliant exhibition by the two best players in the tournament. The Bears' Danny Wells had carried his squad in the first half, scoring 20 of the 24 points and he came out blazing in the second stanza as well. The Wolfpack countered with their All-State player Stuart Towarak. The Bears came roaring back in the third with a 19-9 run and completed the comeback in the fourth, edging the 'Pack 66-64 to advance the championship game. Wells finished with 41 points and Towarak 30.

Friday's championship game for the girls pit Pt. Hope and Noatak. The Harpoonerettes fielded several standout players with experience and balance while the Lynx featured the 2A Player of the Year, Brianna Kirk a dominant all around player. As usually happens when this scenario is played out, the stronger team emerges and Pt. Hope grabbed the conference title 68-46. Noatak would wait to see who they'd play in the "true second" state qualifier game on

The Noatak vs. Pt. Hope boys game on Friday night was an amazing game of punches and counterpunches. Led by senior guards Denzel Tooyak and Jermaine Johnson the lower seeded Harpooners would not let the Lynx build a lead and with less than 10 seconds to go Tooyak tied the game and went to the line to complete the "natural" three point

In a rare turn of events he stepped out of the free throw circle and committed a lane violation giving the ball to the Lynx and a final shot. In a remarkable few seconds however the Lynx turned the ball over and Tooyak drove to the basket as time wound down, sinking an off balance runner to win the game in dramatic fashion. The win thrust Pt. Hope into a rematch with Hadley and the Sissuani and kept them in the running for the championship.

The rematch proved to be another high-energy contest with much drama but Pt. Hope prevailed and advanced to an afternoon game vs. the Unalakleet Wolfpack for the right to play Noorvik in the championship game.

This game had "championship game" pressure as Pt. Hope continued to surge and Unalakleet was coming off the disappointment of the loss to Noorvik. These two teams have a historic friendly rivalry and the battle on the court proved that neither was giving an inch. The halftime score was 25-24 in favor of Pt. Hope but Towarak imposed his will, scoring 20 of his 33 points in the second half carrying the Wolfpack to a 52-45 victory.

The "true second" game between the Noatak girls and Unalakleet shaped up to be a tight one with the Lynx star, Brianna Kirk, facing the Wolfpack's pressure. Kirk proved to be up to the task outscoring the entire Unalakleet squad in the first quarter, 14-9 and the 'Pack could never get close losing 59-47.

The rematch between Noorvik and Unalakleet was much anticipated and the tension was high. With Wells hitting four 3-pointers in the first quarter it appeared that Unalakleet would not be able to contain the Bears but they scrambled back in the second to be only down 35-34 at the half. The teams fought to a 15-15 tie in the third and it came down the final quarter. The fact that Unalakleet had played a physically and emotionally draining game only two hours prior to this game began to be evident. Shots began to fall short and fatigue was obvious as Noorvik pulled ahead and emerged with a 77-69 victory, and a championship.

By Keith Conger

Caity Tozier, a high school senior on the Nome Ski and Biathlon team, found the 5K Individual Race at the Arctic Winter Games, her first international biathlon contest, an eye opening, and motivating, experience. As she was out shot by the field, including her sharp shooting Alaskan teammate Zoey Grenier (who hit an Arctic Winter Games best 19 out of 20 targets), Tozier found herself watching others take podium spots.

That race proved sufficient incentive for the determined rural athlete to be the first, and only time she would have that vantage point.

Tozier's second race at the Gray Mountain Biathlon Range in Whitehorse, Yukon Territories, Canada, produced a vastly different result. Finding the target 8 out of 10 times during the 3K Sprint Race, Tozier was able to overcome the extra time in the penalty loop assessed for each missed shot, (Grenier shot 9 of 10). She was able to use her superior running speed to build a 50 second lead, and claim the highest vantage point top of the podium.

Tozier's effort made history as the first individual gold ulu (medal) earned by a rural junior (ages 15 – 18) biathlete, snowshoe or ski, in well over 10 years. The sharp shooter from Nome would go on and add to her collection of "bling" by taking a silver ulu in the 4K Mass Start Race, and a silver ulu in the 3 x 2K Team Relay.

Tozier was among seven athletes who are members of the Western Interior Ski/Biathlon Association who qualified for the games. Tozier, and Vincent Tomalonis of White Mountain qualified for snowshoe biathlon spots by virtue of their performances at the 2011 state rural ski and biathlon championships (which are hosted by WISA, the Western Interior Ski/Biathlon Association). Tomalonis' high school teammate Asa Bergamaschi, and Katie Daniels of Unalakleet, qualified for Ski Biathlon spots at the WISA meet.

All the WISA biathletes had strong results with Bergamaschi and Tomolonis having fourth place finishes, and Daniels placing fifth in an event.

Two of WISA's athletes, sophomore Rosa Schmidt of Nome, and eighth grader Carolyn Sam of Galena, qualified for the Snowshoe Racing team through postal trials by submitting times to the sport coordinator in Juneau. Sam captured a gold ulu in the 5K run, a silver ulu in the 2.5K run, and a gold ulu in the 4 x 400 meter relay. Schmidt had two strong fourth place finishes.

Caleb Korta, an eighth grade WISA athlete from Galena, qualified for the Arctic Winter Games at the 2011 WISA meet as well. As WISA's lone representative on the cross-country ski squad, Korta had a strong showing against one of the strongest fields at the games.

Joining the skiers and snowshoers at the Arctic Winter Games were two Western Alaskan Arctic Sports (aka Native Youth Olympics) participants. Tahnee Esparza from Golovin had many outstanding performances, earning bronze ulus in the Kneel Jump, the Alaska High Kick, and the 2-foot High Kick. Nome's Emery Booshu earned a bronze ulu in the Alaska High Kick.

Western Alaska was represented by three coaches. Nancy Persons of Unalakleet helped coach the Ski Biathlon Team, Nome's Joni Earp helped coach the Alaska Sports Team, and Nome's Keith Conger helped coach the Snowshoe Racing Team.

Both biathlon disciplines are structured similarly, the only difference being the mode of transport. Athletes ski or snowshoe several times around a course, each time entering a shooting range where they gather their biathlon specific, 22 caliber rifles.

During each shooting session the athlete takes 5 shots from a distance of 50 meters. In Junior Category races (which all the WISA biathletes performed) athletes shoot half of their shots in the standing position, at targets 4.5 inches in diameter. The remaining shots are taken in the prone position, at targets that are only 1.5 inches in diameter.

Hitting a biathlon target after skiing or snowshoeing with an elevated heart rate has been likened to trying to thread a needle while riding a snowmachine.

Occurring every other year, the Arctic Winter Games is a high profile, circumpolar sports competition for northern and arctic athletes. The games celebrate sport, and promote social and cultural exchange.

The Arctic Winter Games started in 1970 with just a handful of events, and only three contingencies (Yukon, Northwest Territories and Alaska). This year over 2,000 athletes gathered from nine northern "nations" to compete in 21 different sports.

Arctic Winter Games participation is limited to regions located north of the 55th parallel. Joining the three original members are Greenland, Russia, Northern Alberta, Nunavut (including Baffin Island), Nunavit (Northern Quebec), and the Sámpi Nation (northern Scandinavia).

Biathlon, snowshoeing, and Alaska Sports are not the only opportunities for rural Alaskans to attend the Arctic Winter Games. The Table Tennis Team is a wonderful, untapped opportunity for participation as well.

The WISA athletes will gather together the last weekend in March for the 2012 Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships in Galena.

STRIDING TOWARDS FIRST PLACE—Nome Nanook Caity Tozier won a gold medal at the 2012 Arctic Winter Games in the 3K Snowshoe Biathlon Sprint Race.

2012 NKC Businessmen's Race goes off without a hitch — almost Eighteen people became mushers in the Nome Kennel Club's Annual Businessmen's Race. Mushers have the opportunity to run three dogs around a three-mile course. For many people this is the first and only time they will be on the runners of a dog sled. Others, like Susan Shinkai of California and Josh Marble of Nome, come back year after year because it's such a fun time.

Six Kennel Club members brought dogs and sleds to the race to give folks this opportunity and many other Kennel Club members and friends provided support in the way of trail grooming, timing, dog handling and trail support.

The first team out of the shoot made it three quarters of the way up Gold Hill and decided to turn left toward Icy View (perhaps heading home). A snowmachine had to chase them down and get them going on the correct path. All other teams were better behaved and no one else had trouble navigating the course. On the bright side, musher number 1, Nat Crichton, got an extra half mile ride —at least that's the spin his dog team's owner tried to put on the situation

The weather was perfect for a sled dog ride and snow conditions were pretty good too. While there were reports of tumbles and tangles, every musher made it to the finish line on their sled and with a smile on their face.

YOUNG CHAMPION — Dallas Seavey and his dog team run through a crowd of well-wishers on Front Street in Nome to become the 2012 Iditarod Trail sled dog race champion team.

With 53 mushers off the trail, Iditarod XL is a wrap 2012 was a cold, tough race with a new champion and hungry competition ready to come back

By Diana Haecker

A few hours after the last shrimp and strawberry leftovers were cleared off the Iditarod awards banquet tables at the Nome Rec Center, the last two mushers of the 2012 Iditarod Trail Sled Dog race drove their dog teams up Front Street under the burled arch. They arrived in the wee hours of Monday morning to officially bring the Iditarod XL race to an end and signaled that every musher and dog team is off the trail, safe and sound. The Red Lantern went to rookie Jan Steves of Edmonds, Washington, who finished the race at 2:57 a.m. after 14 days, 11 hours, 57 minutes and 11 seconds on the trail, blowing out the widow's lantern. Steves' partner, musher Bob Chlupach of Willow, finished two minutes before her.

Thus the 40th running of the Iditarod Sled Dog race came to an end. While the race didn't break any speed records due to cold and tough trail conditions this year, it produced in 25-year-old Dallas Seavey the youngest champion ever and saw 53 finishers altogether. However, not everybody makes it to Nome and 12 mushers scratched along the way, including four-time Iditarod champion Jeff King. One musher, Jake Berkowitz, was withdrawn in Unalakleet due to a hand injury.

Dallas Seavey claimed victory of Iditarod XL on Tuesday evening at 7:29 p.m. after 9 days, 4 hours, 29 minutes and 26 seconds on the trail. The youngest of three Seaveys in the race – father Mitch and grandfather Dan Seavey also competed in the 2012 Iditarod – was welcomed in Nome with cheers and fanfare. He drove his nine dogs up the finish chute with outstretched arms, greeting well-wishers, who closed in on both sides of him. Under the arch, his wife Jen and daughter Annie welcomed the new champion. After being officially checked in, race marshal Mark Nordman guided the young winner to the crowd to shake hands, then ushered him back under the arch to receive the $50,400 winner's check and the oversized car key to a brand new Dodge truck. Seavey sat down at the champion's podium, shook hands with race sponsors and asked for his dogs Guiness, a 9-yearold female, and Diesel, a younger leader, to receive the yellow rose col-

Seavey thanked his sponsors and said he'd be spending most of the prize money for dog food and diapers. "Those are our main expenses these days," Seavey said.

Later, Seavey said that this run was one of the most fun Iditarods he's participated in. "The first quarter was the most fun," he said. The long run to Cripple, dreaded by most, turned out to be the most fun run for him, he said. The best, he said, was to see his dogs come together as a team and work as a team. But then came a realization. "The race was a blast until we got to Unalakleet," Seavey said. "That's when I realized that we could and that we should win this race and that I would be the only one who could screw it up. From there on out, I was a wreck," Seavey

He added that whenever situations felt overwhelming, he would think that this is just a dog race and that he's just mushing dogs. "Let's just take the next stretch of trail ahead of us and take it one run at a time," Seavey said.

All the way up the coast, Aliy Zirkle, Ramey Smyth and Aaron Burmeister were breathing down his neck, just waiting for the opportunity to capitalize on any mistakes. By the time Seavey reached White Mountain, the lead between him and Aliy Zirkle was at one hour – enough to be in striking distance.

In hindsight, Zirkle said, she can't really think of making a strategic mistake. She had reached the coast as the first musher to Unalakleet, but said that the long and cold run from Kaltag to Unalakleet did put a damper on her and therefore the team's morale. "That run was my weak point in the race," Zirkle said.

The 87-mile run took her longer than planned. She said that for the most part, the trail was pretty good until Old Woman's (Cabin) when a lot of snowmachines with paddle tracks had chewed up the trail and made for slow going to Unalakleet.

"When first reached Unalakleet, I thought I had run them too hard there," she said. However, they bounded back and after five and a half hours rest in Unalakleet, she followed Aaron Burmeister and Dallas Seavey out of the checkpoint to head toward Shaktoolik.

Zirkle trailed Seavey into Koyuk and was still within striking distance. "I knew that we've got a dog team that could win," she told The Nome Nugget. Most of the same team members came excruciatingly close to winning several premier races this season. They finished the Sheep Mountain 150 race in second place by only 20 seconds. They finished the 2012 Yukon Quest in second place, 26 seconds behind the winner Hugh Neff.

The pressure was on Zirkle to try for an Iditarod victory. "It was all about if I could make the right moves and execute the right strategy, and if I could hold the dog team together or not," she said. On the Yukon, Zirkle said that she felt her team really "jelling", or coming together. Other teams were slowing down and she thought she could bust a move ahead going straight from Galena to Kaltag by blowing through Nulato. But Mitch Seavey, John Baker and other competitors did the same thing.

Injuries to two pivotal dogs, in the end, cost her pulling power that may have given her the edge over Seavey, just when she was catching up to him two hours out of Koyuk. Olivia and Boone Dog, two of Zirkle's fastest dogs, hurt their triceps on a difficult run through white-out conditions in deep snow between Koyuk and Elim and she had to drop them in Elim, going on with 10 dogs. Looking in front of her, she was focused on catching Dallas Seavey, but what made her nervous was what was behind her. "My biggest concern was that Pete Kaiser and Jake Berkowitz would catch up," Zirkle said.

Not knowing that Jake Berkowitz had been withdrawn by race marshal Mark Nordman due to a knife injury to his hand in Unalakleet, Zirkle kept on looking over her shoulder for the orange jacket and a zipping dog team. However, quietly and without much fanfare, Ramey Smyth, clad in white pants and wind parka, was in hot pursuit of Seavey and Zirkle.

Zirkle as well as Dallas Seavey said that they remained amazed and inspired by the calibers of dog teams that they and Ramey Smyth were driving. "You don't want Aliy and Ramey as your closest competitors," Seavey said at the finish line, literally still looking over his shoulder.

Zirkle ended up not catching Seavey and she mushed into second place, only one hour after Seavey. Although all smiles and her usual upbeat self, Zirkle admitted that indeed she felt disappointed. Not quite at that moment as the Nome crowd loudly cheered her on and gave her quite a welcome under the arch, but after seeing a photo of Seavey's lead dogs sitting on the champion's podium and wearing the infamous collars studded with yellow roses. "I didn't realize I was going to feel that way," Zirkle said later. "The difference in prize money isn't that big," she said, "and the truck, well, it sure would've been nice to win it.' But what got her was the photo in the newspaper of Seavey's dogs wearing the rose collars. "Seeing the roses I felt that my dogs deserved some recognition, too," Zirkle said. "In the whole scope of things, we were only one hour behind." Zirkle said at the awards banquet that she would buy her lead dogs Quito and Beamer a huge bouquet of red roses once they returned to the SP Kennels back home in Two Rivers.

Ramey Smyth, last year's second place winner, reached Nome 35 minutes after Zirkle and finished his race with 9 dogs after 9 days, 6 hours and 4 minutes.

Four hours later, Nome's Aaron Burmeister finished in his personal best, in fourth position. Burmeister had taken a three-year hiatus after the 2009 Iditarod Trail sled dog race and came back with a vengeance. He had taken some time off from the race to be with his wife Mandy and young son Hunter.

Burmeister spends the winters in Nenana and the summers in Nome. Out of 13 Iditarod races he ran, he said, this year's was the most challenging race of all. "It was a tough race, tough trail conditions and intense competition," he said.

Burmeister came back with a team

Burmeister came back with a team of young dogs that he had kept after having sold most of his adult dogs to Dallas Seavey in 2009 when he finished the Iditarod in 7th place. The youngsters, varying in age between 3 and 4, plus two older hands borrowed from Sebastian Schnuelle's kennel, formed a strong team that propelled Burmeister into the top 5. Burmeister said that he ran conservatively although he put a lot of long runs on the dogs. "It was too cold to race them hard," Burmeister said.

"I made a lot of stops and kept feeding them in shorter breaks. We consistently stayed cold and saw nights -30°F to -45°F," said Burmeister. The coldest stretch was on the Yukon and between Old Woman and Unalakleet. In terms of snow conditions, the feared Steps weren't much of an issue for mushers this year, but Burmeister had a harrowing tale to tell of driving out of Rohn with 16 fully charged dogs and dropping onto a glare ice West Fork of the Kuskokwim River.

Snow and wind made for poor visibility and Burmeister realized that he missed the Gee turn. He was unable to stop the strong dog team barreling down the river ice riddled with driftwood. He went down two miles before being able to stop his team. "I broke my anchor line, the sled stanchion broke and bolts were sheering off," Burmeister described the horror ride. "At first I was standing with both feet on my break, then dragging sideways behind a team of 16 dogs down the glare ice until I was able to lodge my foot on a tree stump and stop the team, turn it around and put old leaders in front. It was crazy," Burmeister said.

After reaching safer trail conditions, Burmeister was able to fix the sled and continue down the trail. For most of the rest of the trail. I was focusing on the dogs, he said, until he started to get sick and spent a few days driving with fever, shivering and sweating at the same time on the

Finally, in Koyuk, Burmeister got his clothes dried out and felt better. From Koyuk to the finish line, he was in racing mode. A few younger dogs became mentally tired, he said, and he dropped them. This would enable him to charge ahead with 10 solid dogs and he would wait for Dallas Seavey, Aliy Zirkle and Ramey Smyth to make the slightest mistake.

"At that point I was looking to capitalize on any mistakes they may make," Burmeister said. But they didn't. In White Mountain the top four gathered for their mandatory eight hours of rest before making the push for the last 77 miles to Nome.

"We all had our game faces on, and we were in racing mode," Burmeister said. "We complimented each other on the dog teams we had and actually we got along real well." In the end, there were no mistakes.

Burmeister is most excited about his dog team. "There are three young super stars in the team, they are all litter mates called Ruger, Remi and Moss," he said. He also gives credit to Grizman and Inuk out of Schnuelle's kennel.

Burmeister said he would love to give his dogs another opportunity to move a few spots up to claim the championship of the Iditarod sled dog race in the future. After all, a few of the dogs he had raised were part of the team that won Dallas Seavey a Yukon Quest victory in 2011 and this year's Iditarod. So, Burmeister wants to race his dogs to victory, but racing competitively does not come cheap. While the winner's check of $50,400 sounds like a lot of money, consider the funds that a musher has to sink into the race. Burmeister runs a kennel of 18 dogs and he said that lacking big sponsors this year, he paid most expenses out-of-pocket. He said his budget ran between $120,000 to $140,000. "This includes feed, kennel help, paying a kennel manager, trail maintenance and getting to other races that I consider training runs to prepare the team for the Iditarod," explains Burmeister.

He still has the goal to win the Iditarod, and he said, his team showed him they have the stuff to do so.

"I sure would like to bring the victory home to Nome," said Burmeis-

Rounding out the top ten were Peter Kaiser, Ray Redington Jr., Mitch Seavey, Michael Williams Jr., John Baker and Deedee Jonrowe. Brent Sass claimed the highest rookie position and received the Rookie of the Year award.

Mushers kept on trickling into Nome all throughout the week that saw sunny, cold and windy weather. There were unintentional family trips, like father and son duo Martin and Rohn Buser who finished together and Buser joked that it was bring-your-kids-to-work year."

They turned their dogs loose in the chute and let spectators cuddle dogs. Twins Anna and Kristy Berington also finished together, running up the finish ramp side by side, holding hands. Kristy Berington, driving dogs of Paul Gebhardt's kennel received a bouquet of red roses from Gebhardt. At the awards banquet the Kasilof musher thanked his partner Kristy for "making mushing fun again for him." Gebhardt finished in 15th position.

Four-time race winner Lance Mackey arrived on a bright Thursday morning to a cheering crowd and as reporters badgered him about whether or not he'd be disappointed, he set them straight. "You know, it's not all bad even when it's bad," Mackey said. "You know, I think about a few years back when doctors told me that I wouldn't be doing this stuff anymore, that was bad. So getting to Nome with a team that is somewhat healthy and somewhat jazzed is not that bad. You don't have to win to be successful," Mackey said.

Mackey compared the Iditarod to a NASCAR race that when one thing goes wrong, ten cars go by and one is never able to play catch-up again. "I'm not going to stand here making excuses why I wasn't here a couple of days ago," he said. "But the root of the my problem is right here." With this, he pointed to his lead dog Maple, who lounged in single lead position on the snow.

Mackey said she left the truck in Anchorage in full heat. "She wore my team out chasing after her," Mackey said. Romantic entanglements along the way delayed Mackey's planned departures from many a checkpoint due to Maple. "Entertaining," this is how Mackey described his 2012 Iditarod race.

On a more serious note. Mackey addressed his fans, saying that the Iditarod had been amazing to him and his life. "No matter what happens to me for the rest of my career, the Iditarod will continue to be amazing to me and benefit me all the way until I quit breathing, from what I accomplished here," Mackey said. "So from here on I'm watching my boys run. I got my stepson Cain here last year, I got my other "stepson" and handler Braxton Peterson to arrive in a few hours and that to me is just about as rewarding as winning any race, in my opinion," Mackey

Cervical cancer screening: New guidelines for women

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Otherwise healthy women do not need annual cervical cancer screening, according to new guidelines from the American Cancer Society and the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force. Both the ACS and USP-STF now recommend screening every three years with an extension to every five years for certain women.

The female cervix, the opening to the uterus, is a common site of a deadly form of cancer known as squamous-cell cervical cancer. Prior to routine screening in the 20th century, this cervical cancer was one of the most common causes of death for women.

But cervical cancer can now be eradicated if detected at an early stage. According to the American Cancer Society, the survival rate for invasive cervical cancer has risen to over 90 percent. Cervical cancer has fallen to 14th among common causes of cancer deaths for women, largely due to regular screening and, more recently, a vaccine to protect against cervical cancer.

> Cervical cancer is considered a sexually transmitted disease. Over 90 percent of cervical cancer occurs due to infection with R the human papilloma virus. HPV is transmitted by sexual contact. Certain forms of the virus are more likely than others to cause cancer.

Doctors screen women for cervical cancer using two methods. The most common method is called the Papanicolaou (Pap) cytologic test. The Pap test involves using a microscope to scan for cancer or pre-cancer cells obtained from the cervix during a pelvic exam. An alternate method involves sampling the cervix for the presence of high-risk strains of HPV.

The ACS and USPSTF make the following recommendation regarding the frequency of testing that provides the greatest benefit:

- Women between ages 21 and 65 without risk factors (such as HIV or other immunodeficiency disease) should undergo cytologic screening with a Pap test every three years.
- Women ages 30 to 65 may extend the screening interval to every five years with a combined cytologic screen (Pap test) and HPV testing.
- Women younger than age 21 no longer need to be screened.
- Women older than age 65 who have been previously screened should not continue screening.

It is important to remember that cancer screening is a vital part of women's health, but it is not the only part. While the interval between cervical cancer screenings has been extended for otherwise healthy women, it is critical that annual wellness exams include screening for other illnesses such as hypertension, breast cancer, diabetes, skin cancer, thyroid disease, and autoimmune disease.

It is also important to note that screening guidelines are merely guidelines. This means that your provider may adjust the recommendations to meet your personal needs or address your risks. Talk with your doctor about how the new guidelines may apply to you.

Finishing The Race!

Pastor Mike Christian - River of Life Assembly of God Member of Nome Ministerial Association

By the time this week's paper makes its way into your hands we will have completed the 40th Iditarod. The last musher will have crossed the "Finish Line" and the "Red Lantern" will have been awarded. As usual, this year's race has been filled with moments of excitement and close finishes. although 66 teams started the race, some did not finish due to some unforeseen reason. All the effort put into training the dogs, conditioning themselves for the grueling journey paid off for some, but for others it ended in disappointment.

Friends, it is so important that we "Finish the Race" that is set before us as followers of Christ. All our personal efforts to prepare for this "Race" we call "Life" will fall short if we are not properly prepared. The only way to be totally prepared is to be in a committed relationship with Jesus Christ! In Philippians, the Apostle Paul gives us some direction concerning "Finishing

"Not that I have already obtained all this, or have already been made perfect, but I press on to take hold of that for which Christ Jesus took hold of me. Brothers, I do not consider myself yet to have taken hold of it. But one thing I do: Forgetting what is behind and straining toward what is ahead, I press on toward the goal to win the prize for which God has called me heavenward in Christ Jesus. —Philippians 3:12-14

As Christians you and I must be determined to "Finish the Race!" Our hearts, our minds and our souls must be filled with the desire to complete the race that we have begun as a child of God. In order for us to complete this race, we must also prepare ourselves by studying God's holy word. We must read it and put forth every effort possible to understand and apply it to our lives on a daily basis. We must live according to the principles and follow the instructions the Lord gives us, if we are to "Finish the Race." You and I must remain focused on the prize that the apostle Paul speaks of here in this passage. This prize is eternal life in Christ Jesus and the promise of reigning with him throughout all eternity in Heaven itself.

Again, the apostle Paul speaks to us concerning the importance of knowing and living out the word of God in our lives in his second letter to Timothy.

"Do your best to present yourself to God as one approved, a workman who does not need to be ashamed and who correctly handles the word of - II Timothy 2:15 -

The desire of my heart is to serve my Lord and Savior with all my strength while upon this earth. And, I know the only way I can fulfill this desire is to seek him with all of my heart, mind, soul and strength. So, all my efforts to finish the race the Lord has called me to run, must be combined with an intense desire to adhere to his word and fulfill his will for my life each and every day. I must put into practice the Word of God each and every moment during this journey called "My Life," if I expect to someday cross the most important finish line and enter Heaven's gates to spend all eternity with Jesus Christ, my Lord.

I encourage you to make that commitment, to surrender yourself to finishing the race that truly counts. The prize at the end of this race is worth more than all the gold in the world. This race, when finished, will find you inside the gates of Heaven, praising and worshipping the Lord God of glory throughout all eternity!

Values, and respecting our traditional lifestyle. Alex was oldest resident and tribal member in Shishmaref until he died.

Grandpa Alex will be greatly missed by many in Shishmaref, the Bering Strait and NANA regions, throughout the State of Alaska and from the lower 48. He was well known for his arts and crafts, and especially his great hospitality. He welcomed anyone into his home, shared stories, skills, and his vast knowledge throughout his 93 years of life. Even when he was not feeling well, he made sure those around him were taken care of. Grandpa looked forward to community events including birthdays, Christmas activities, Spring Church conference, Annual Spring Carnival and spring hunting. He and his wife Elsie would have a house full of guests consisting of family and friends. He loved his children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren dearly. His smile, soft spoken words of wisdom, and kind mannered advice will be cherished by all who knew him.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED CHANGES IN THE REGULATIONS OF THE ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL BOARD

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board proposes to adopt regulation changes in Title 13 of the Alaska Administrative Code dealing with repackaging of beer from kegs and the definition of "owner or representative" as it relates to prohibited financial interest, including the following:

(1) 13 AAC 104.365 is a proposed new section to establish standards under which the repackaging of beer from kegs into other containers is allowed.

(2) 13AAC 104.980 is a proposed new section to define the term "owner or representative" for purposes of AS 04.11.450, prohibited financial interest.

You may comment on the proposed regulation changes, including the potential costs to private persons of complying with the proposed changes, by submitting written comments to Shirley A. Gifford, Director, Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, 5848 E. Tudor Road, Anchorage, AK 99507, by fax at 907-272-9412 or email dps_abc_web@alaska.gov. The comments must be received no later than 4:30 p.m., April 30, 2012.

If you are a person with a disability who may need a special accommodation in order to participate in the process on the proposed regulations, please contact the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board at (907) 269-0350 no later than April 26, 2012 to ensure that any necessary accommodations can be provided.

The proposed regulation changes are available on the Department of Public Safety website at www.dps.alaska.gov/Comm/regulations.aspx or by request through the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board email at dps.abc.web@alaska.gov, telephone: 907-269-0350, fax: 907-272-9412, or its office at 5848 E. Tudor Road, Anchorage, Alaska

Gold dredgers are heading to Nome

Mining companies ramp up for offshore mining activities this summer

Mining companies ramp up preparations for offshore mining activities this summer By Diana Haecker

Gold companies from as far as South Africa, Texas and as close as Anchorage are busy planning their first summer in Nome, dredging for gold offshore.

After a September 2011 mineral offshore lease sale conducted by the Alaska Department of Natural Resources, the major players are ramping up their preparations to get going as soon as the ice moves out.

The South African company AngloGold Ashanti successfully bid on 26 offshore tracts totaling about 16,800 acres. With their marine exploration partner DeBeers, they have formed a technical services company called AuruMar Ltd, which operates in South Africa, New Zealand and beginning in the summer of 2012 in

AuruMar's general manager Gary van Eck told The Nome Nugget that this summer, only exploration work is going to happen. From South Africa, he wrote in an email exchange with the Nugget that their 2012 summer program has three objectives: "Work towards establishing accurate environmental baseline studies for the proposed operation, performing a geophysical survey and conducting a drill sampling program in selected locations within the lease areas," Eck wrote. Without the data, he wrote, it is impossible to determine whether a mining operation will in fact be viable and, if it is, what size that operation might be in terms of people, vessels and related shore infrastructure.

For this summer, Eck said that Alaskan-based contractors SRK Consulting and RWJ Consulting have been hired to help AuruMar with permitting co-ordination and environmental baseline studies. Asked about more information about the nature of the proposed mining operations, Eck said that both AngloGold Ashanti and DeBeers are publicly traded companies – or owned

Council approves raise for union employees

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council tripped the light fantastic through a packet of business more that half an inch thick in 40 minutes Monday evening.

The fattest part of the business comprised a three-year contract with City employees represented by City of Nome Employees Assn. After City Manager Josie Bahnke toted up

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

nugget@nomenugget.com

the raises, the cost to the City came to $46,900.1 plus $22,500 for a $500 lump sum cost of living benny for each employee on Jan. 1 for the next three years, bringing the total cost to $69,400.

"I can say our City employees are being very well compensated," Councilwoman Mary Knodel said, and then cast the lone "no" vote on the resolution approving the contract.

In general terms, the agreement provides a 2 percent raise annually plus a lump sum payment of $500 for cost of living adjustment on Jan. 1, all retroactive to Jan. 1, 2012.

The agreement calls for a 2 percent increase on Jan. 1 for each of three years through 2014. This is a 6 percent increase over three years, but more than a 6 percent increase over current pay as the 2 percent is figured on the already increased pay rate for the previous year. Employees at the high end of the scale, Step G and above will receive 3 percent additional per year through 2014, plus the Pay differential for swing shift will increase from 90 cents an hour to $1.50 an hour; "graveyard" shift workers will receive a raise in differential from $1.50 to $2 per hour.

Three pay classifications have jumped up in pay ranges. Harbormaster assistant has gone from range 12 that would start at $20.02 under the new 2012 rate to range 14, starting at $23.26. Police investigator has been added at Range 17, starting at $29.07. A new bargaining position, collection assistant at Carrie M McLain Museum at Range 12, starting at $20.02 in 2012.

The pay for the town's policemen also went up. Chief John Papasodora said he had not yet analyzed the effect on retention and recruitment but would do so.

The agreement takes the position of financial director out of the negotiated labor pool to join other nonbargaining unit employees: city manager, chief of police, city clerk, finance director, city manager's administrative assistant, public works superintendent, recreation center director, fire marshal, harbormaster, building inspector and city engineer. The contract retroactive to Jan. 1, 2012 spends less than the previous contract signed in 2009. The contract does not cover Nome Joint Utility Employees.

No state building?

Mayor Denise Michels gave an update on the state building project that was set to be built on the Sitnasuak Native Corp. lot across from Board of Trade saloon. The state Dept. of Administration had looked at numbers and decided not all options had been considered.

"The governor has asked his staff to look at what it would cost to completely remodel the existing state building," Michels said. However, Sen. Donny Olson has a bill in legislature for alternative financing of the new building through Alaska Housing Finance Corp. under which the state would buy back the finished building, according to Michels. The governor would go along with the plan as long as the numbers stayed constant, she said.

"It feels like we went about four steps backwards," she told the Council

In other business, the Council voted into first reading the following ordinances:

- An amended ordinance to sell the Ambulance Garage at 505 Bering Street to the highest bidder.
- An ordinance disposing of municipal property near Seppala Drive to State of Alaska by quitclaim deed for construction of the new Snake River Bridge. City of Nome will give up the combined pieces equaling an approximate acre of land for $318,000.

Letters -

Dear Editor,

I have sent the following letter to the state senators in Juneau. Dear Senators,

I sincerely apologize for not paying attention to this bill earlier. I hadn't even heard of it until watching Gavel to Gavel testimony in Sen. Judiciary. HB 80 is one of the most dangerous bills I have ever seen get so far in the legislative process! One of the longstanding safeguards to the life of a victim is the Duty To Retreat when faced with danger. Fight or Flight! Flight is better, if possible. And that's the protection offered to victims in current state statute.

This business of "Standing Your Ground when in a place you're allowed to legally be" gives license to all sorts of harm, even death to a victim or to a perpetrator!

To me, this bill looks like Alaska's answer to not having the Death Penalty on the books.

We have in this state a recognized substance abuse problem. Having worked in the rural areas for seven years and now living in Nome, I see it, read about it, have worked with victims when acting director of the Bering Sea Women's Group — the domestic violence/sexual assault shelter in Nome.

Drunk or drug influenced people with guns and knives and other handy weapons creates a losing situation for all involved, including public safety officers, health aides, neighbors, families, whole villages. Nome, while not a village, is also affected by the acts of people with

My son is a 16-year veteran police officer in Las Vegas Metro Police Department and worked major crimes and drugs for 10 of those years; my son-in-law is a 10-year veteran police officer in Anchorage. They have both been severely injured on the job by people who later claimed self-defense in court.

Already in statute are legitimate claims to self-defense. Courts recognize those legitimate claims as do juries. Being in a "place one is legally entitled to be" and "feeling threatened" is simply not an excuse for using deadly force on another when one is able to retreat from that threat or perceived threat.

Let me remind you of Trayvon Martin in Florida. Do you really want to legalize the future actions of an Alaskan self-appointed neighborhood "protector" (read: vigilante)?

OPINION

I urge you to kill, as it were, considering its topic, HB 80 in the/OUR Finance Committee!

If you have questions or would like to speak with me about my concerns, please feel free to contact me.

By the way, I have a Glock, so don't think I'm an anti-gun nut. Sincerely,

Jana Varrati Nome, AK 99762

Hi Nancy,

I'd like to let everyone know that right now there are two bills in the state senate that would provide money for alcohol treatment and emergency shelters. Please call and email your support for these bills!

Senator Olson's Senate Bill 223: would give businesses a tax incentive for donating money to non-profits running emergency shelter (like NEST and the Women's Shelter) and alcohol treatment and detox pro-

Senator Ellis' Senate Bill 221: Right now 50 percent of the state tax on alcohol goes to alcohol treatment and prevention services. This bill would have 100 percent of this tax go toward alcohol treatment and prevention services. The bill also requests funding for the development of a Wellness Center for Nome.

Dear Nancy,

I read with interest the letter from Karen Nanouk published in the March 15 issue of the Nugget. The world has such a strange disconnect with alcohol. Dear Editor.

I recently subscribed to your paper and I really enjoy reading it. I am totally stunned at the Nome temperatures. I guess you would be stunned in west Texas in the summer where 100°F+ days are not unusual. Your March 10th edition back page story in reference to the winner of the Iron Dog Race confused me! If the winners traveled 1,108 miles in 35.65 hours, I get the following:

Asking for Trouble

Alaska is trying to enact a "stand your ground" law (HB#80 Self Defense). This would eliminate the requirement that a person who felt threatened should first try to retreat prior to shooting their perceived attacker. Sure. 23 other states have similar laws; because the other guys have such a law doesn't mean Alaska has to have one.

Remember when your mom would say, "Just because everyone else jumps off a cliff, doesn't mean you have to jump off a cliff." Florida has this type of law and look at the mess they have to deal with. The town of Sanford has an ugly situation where a private security guard shot to death a black teen-aged boy who was talking to his girlfriend on his cell phone and eating a bag of Skittles. The guard thought he was a perceived threat. Just what makes up a perceived threat?

This type of law is too dangerous and can make killers out of ordinary people and fatalities out of innocent Alaskans. The HB 80 is not conducive to a society where we have trust and faith in our fellow human beings and can feel free to stroll in the evenings with a can of pop and a bag of candy without being shot by some near-sighted vigilante. — N.L.M.-

Court order redistricting board ordered to follow different process

By Diana Haecker

The Supreme Court ordered the Alaska Redistricting Board last week to go back to the drawing board and formulate a new redistricting plan using a different process than it did the first time around.

The order comes in response to the Redistricting Board appealing a Superior Court decision that ruled that house districts 1,2, 37 and 38 should be redrawn.

The issue with house districts 1 and 2 was that they are not compact, an Alaska Constitutional requirement. House district 37 also did not show compactness and contiguity. The boundaries for house district 38 violated the constitutional requirement for socio-economic integration, Superior Court judge Michael Mc-Conahy ruled. The Redistricting Board appealed the decision to redraw house district 37 and 38, but ended up with a ruling from the Supreme Court that could potentially change the whole redistricting plan or not.

Taylor Bickford, executive director of the Alaska Redistricting Board explained that the Supreme Court ruled not necessarily against the boundaries, but against the process that was used. The Supreme Court declined to rule on any of the issues but found that the board didn't follow the procedure known as the Hickel process.

"Our board took a different approach," Bickford said. "The Hickel process was not on our radar, it's not written in the Alaska Statutes, not in the Constitution and the last time district boundaries were redrawn, the Redistricting Board didn't go by it either," said Bickford. Simplified, the Hickel process – stemming from a 1990s lawsuit of the Southeast Conference vs. Hickel — describes that the new redistricting plan first needs to satisfy Alaska Constitutional requirements and is then examined for fulfilling the federal Voting Rights Act.

The court ruling document says, "In Hickel v. Southeast Conference, we considered a Proclamation Plan that, like the Plan in this case, "accorded minority voting strength priority above other factors, including the requirements of article VI, section 6 of the Alaska Constitution."

We cautioned that while compliance with the Voting Rights Act takes precedence over compliance with the Alaska Constitution, "[t]he Voting Rights Act need not be elevated in stature so that the requirements of the Alaska Constitution are unnecessarily compromised. We then described the process the Board must follow to ensure that our constitutional redistricting principles are adhered to as closely as possible. After receiving the decennial census data,

"[t]he Board must first design a reapportionment plan based on the requirements of the Alaska Constitution. That plan then must be tested against the Voting Rights Act.'

"We drew boundaries considering the Voting Rights Act and decided to draw the rural Native districts first because we knew that the Native voting strength was every important and all advisors, lawyers and experts advised us to do so," Bickford told The Nome Nugget.

The court however ruled that the Hickel process "provides the Board with defined procedural steps that, when followed, ensure redistricting satisfies federal law without doing unnecessary violence to the Alaska

The unique ruling by the Supreme Court told the Redistricting Board to redraw the plan to follow the Alaska Constitution first. Bickford said that the "new" plan might not change at all, change slightly or change dramatically. The Bering Strait and Norton Sound District is house district 39, reaching from the Bering Sea all the way to the Canadian border, but wasn't part of the change that was ordered in the Superior Court ruling.

"Anything is a possibility," Bickford said. "It's like your math teacher says that you have the right answer but you need to demonstrate how you solved the problem with the right formula," Bickford said.

The Redistricting Board is meeting this week to work toward the adoption of a new redistricting plan and hopes to have its work done by the June 1 candidate-filing deadline.

NovaGold director resigns, indicted for money laundering

NovaGold Resources Inc., the owner of Nome's idle Rock Creek gold mine and other holdings in town, announced that director James Philip has resigned "for personal reasons."

According to the Vancouver Sun Newspaper, Philip, 58, was one of four Canadians indicted in the United States in February for running an illegal sports gambling website and money laundering in connection with the website Bodog.com. Philip has not been extradited to the US, but remains

Philip was a director at NovaGold from 2003 until his resignation last week. A NovaGold press release wishes him the best in his future endeavors and thanked him for his contributions.

The new director is Anthony Walsh, a former CEO and president of mining outfits such as Miramar Mining Corp., Sabina Gold and Silver Corp., and International by public companies – and they need to explore first to see what they've got.

"Our exploration work this and subsequent seasons, together with the results of the technical studies, will enable us to determine whether a mining operation will in fact be viable, and if so, the scale of the operation," Eck wrote. In conjunction with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, the DNR and the Army Corps of Engineers, they will conduct environmental baseline surveys and studies.

Eck also said that AuruMar leased two boats from a local Nome boat owner for these environmental surveys, set to begin once the ice leaves the shores of Nome. The geophysical survey will begin in mid-June and entails the running of a number of seismic data acquisition lines in the lease areas. "We are currently formulating the program, and are about to engage with the various agencies regarding the proposed equipment to be used. Similarly, the drill sampling will entail drilling a number of small diameter boreholes in the lease areas. We are currently finalizing the appointment of contractors to perform these two work elements, and they will be acquiring the vessels they require," Eck wrote.

Eck said that the company plans to host a public information meeting in late May in Nome. The core Auru-Mar team will number between two and five persons – not including the contractors – and according to Eck their Alaskan contractors have arranged for accommodation and transportation.

Eck said that they also drew up a concept to evaluate various mining methods from an environmental impact, operations performance and cost perspective. "The 2012 exploration work, in conjunction with the concept studies, will assist us in making informed decisions around the timing and scale of the proposed operation offshore Nome," Eck wrote. "AuruMar naturally hopes that the work undertaken is successful and commits to an on-going dialogue with your readers and the people of Nome as our project develops," he said.

Blue Water Gold LLC, an Austin/Texas company specifically formed to "mine the gold bearing sands off the coast of Nome" according to their website, are also ramping up preparations to commence their operations in Nome this summer. Blue Water Gold acquired five tracts totaling 640 acres during the DNR lease sale. Co-owner Keith Byer said that they will be bringing up the first vessel, a 50 foot long boat with a 10-inch suction dredge to Nome with the first barge in June. But that's not all. Byer said that they are in the process of building a multiplatform vessel that would be capable of several different marine mining techniques and would be able to mine 30 to 60 feet below the water's surface. The mining platforms would be able to have either bucket lift capabilities, such as the Christine Rose, operated by Steve and Shawn Pomrenke, and would also be able to operate with cutter heads as well as a remote controlled 20-inch suction dredge. This multipurpose and multi-platform vessel is slated to arrive in Nome by the end of the 2012 summer season.

Byer said that in addition to going to work marine mining this summer, they will be conducting core drilling and setting up a base camp for future years. "In our first year, we hope to establish successful operations," Byer told The Nome Nugget. "We have no perceived expectations other than putting the infrastructure in place for future operations."

The "infrastructure" includes 75 tons of equipment, machinery and supplies that are en route to Seattle now and will then will make its way by barge to Nome. Byer said that for now they are coming with a group of six people, who will be housed in barged-in Recreational Vehicles and fifth-wheel trailers at a rented base camp at the Fort Davis Roadhouse.

Byer said that in the future they are looking to purchase land to set up a permanent base in Nome - at least for the next 10 years. Byer said the initial budget and investment runs in the ballpark between $2 and $3 million. While the company for now is owned by individual investors, Byer said, if things pan out, they may consider going public. Asked about how their interest in Nome was generated, Byer said that he had been studying the Nome history and its offshore potential for five years. He said that it doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out that there are gold deposits in the offshore areas. He said that technology has advanced to the point where the current gold price justifies the cost of available technology to make offshore mining feasible.

A company that also successfully bid on tracts but that holds its cards closer to the chest is Solomon Gold Inc. Solomon Gold is a spinoff of Alaska Earth Sciences, an Alaskan full service geological consulting firm. Solomon Gold Inc, an Anchorage-based company, was also created specifically to acquire DNR leases and to develop the offshore placer gold deposits. They have acquired five lease tracts totaling 2,500 acres during the DNR auction. Kevin Gray, one of Solomon Gold's directors said that he is not at liberty to discuss the company's plans, but he revealed that this summer, there'd be bulk sampling and surveying being done. "This summer, we may have smaller activities going on and in the years 2013 and 2014 there could potentially be some work done," Gray said.

While street talk places the numbers of dredges coming into Nome with barges this summer in the hundreds, if not thousands, the barging company Alaska Logistics confirmed only five bookings of dredges so far. However, they had at least 200 requests for quotes for dredges of all sizes. The same goes for transportation company Northland Services. They saw a spike in requests for quotes as soon as the show Bering Sea Gold aired and have six confirmed bookings to date. Pro-West Contractors LLC bid on leases but also advertises to barge dredges and mining equipment to Nome. The Pro-West barge is leaving Seattle for Nome on May 15. The Pro-West Contractors' website quotes a gold miners' special of $4,500 for a 20-ft. cargo container loaded with 18,000 pounds of equipment and supplies. DNR's Kerwin Krause says so far he has received 60 permit applications.

- An ordinance to lease the Snow Removal Building off Greg Kruschek Avenue to Norton Sound Health Corp. for temporary construction related use during summer months when the City has no need for the facility.
- An ordinance authorizing the City of Nome to buy real property from Alaska Gold for $15,000.
- An amendment to the Port of Nome Tariff No. 8 changing docking permit rates for inner harbor users. Vessels 30 feet and under will pay weekly, $75; monthly, $225 and seasonal, $650. Vessels 31 feet to 50 feet will pay weekly, 40 percent of daily rate; monthly, 25 percent of daily rate; and seasonal, 15 percent of daily rate. Vessels 51 feet and over will pay weekly, 55 percent of daily rate; monthly, 35 percent daily rate; and seasonal, 25 percent of daily rate. The action stems from a discovery of a discrepancy in the tariff adopted on Feb. 27 and reflects a correction made by the Port Commission at their meeting March 23.

Vessels without capacity to store 50 gallons of hazardous materials and no insurance will add a surcharge of 10 cents per foot per day.

These measures will come up for second reading and final passage at the next regular Council meeting.

Buv lemonade

The Council voted May 6, 2012 as Lemonade Day Nome to support a community-wide educational event to teach youngsters K through 12 the spirit of enterprise with basic business and entrepreneurial skills. The statewide happening, Lemonade Day Alaska 2012 May 6, gives children of all socio-economic backgrounds the opportunity to learn about starting their own business. Young people will receive a free backpack containing business resources. Skills will include setting goals, finding investors, purchasing supplies, opening a bank account and giving back to the community.

Dan Sullivan, DNR commissioner will meet with the Council Thursday afternoon at 1:30 p.m. and hold another meeting at 6:30 p.m. at Old St. Joe's to hear questions and suggestions concerning the upcoming mining season and providing services for the anticipated inflow of gold seekers snow, swerved and hit a utility pole near mile marker 0.5 of the highway. The ATV snapped the power pole and live electrical wires lay on the ground, Stotts said. Witnesses called 911 and provided immediate assistance until the Nome Volunteer Fire Department and the Nome Volunteer Ambulance Department arrived to extricate Ahkinga from the ATV that had rolled to the side and came to rest on the driver's side.

Ahkinga was taken to Norton

Sound Regional Hospital and was pronounced dead a short time later, police said. Ahkinga was not wearing a helmet or safety devices such as a seatbelt. Police said that alcohol was not a factor in the accident. The state medical examiner ordered the body of Ahkinga to be flown to Anchorage for an autopsy.

Sgt. Stotts added that travel on a four-wheeler on state highways is not allowed. "We encourage the use of helmets and not to drive at excessive speeds," Stotts said.

KNOM Radio Mission, Inc. completes purchase of KNOM AM & FM

sion, Inc. has received the final documents to formally close on the purchase of radio stations KNOM-AM and KNOM-FM from the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska.

"All of KNOM's radio licenses have been transferred, and KNOM is now owned by KNOM Radio Mission, Inc.," said KNOM General Manager Ric Schmidt. "We thank Bishop Kettler for his assistance in the sale of KNOM from the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska to KNOM Radio Mission, Inc."

Schmidt is working with lawyers in Washington, DC to finish the final paperwork to satisfy the Federal Communications Commission requirements for license transfer. KNOM's seven member board of directors now control the KNOM radio operation, but there are no plans to change personnel or KNOM's radio programming. KNOM Radio Mission, Inc. board members include Fr. Ross Tozzi, Florence Busch, Bob Froehle, Annie Blandford, Dr. Paul Korchin, Kevin Fimon and Dennis

"Our next big challenge is KNOM's transition to an all-digital operation," Schmidt said. "Converting and expanding the broadcast studios will modernize the facilities, making them immensely easier to service and monitor, even from thousands of miles away.'

KNOM anticipates saving over $100,000 annually through energy efficiency upgrades, including LED lighting, dynamic carrier control, and increased heating efficiency.

KNOM has received a grant from the Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation for $60,000 and an anonymous matching challenge pledge of $50,000. To complete applications and proposals to other major gift foundations and organizations, KNOM is seeking support for their digital studio plans by collecting letters and emails of support. After three weeks of appealing to listeners during KNOM's Iditarod coverage, Schmidt says donations, letters, and emails of support are beginning to arrive in the mail and through the knom.org website.

"Local donations are being matched, dollar for dollar. Letters of support are arriving, showing how much our listeners support our studio expansion and renovation plans, said Schmidt. "These messages help us build momentum and access other funding sources for the construction campaign.'

KNOM plans to break ground this summer for the digital conversion project and studio expansion.

KNOM Radio Mission, Inc. is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit. Its broadcast signal reaches listeners across 100 thousand square miles of Western

Arctic Council: Task force meets in Alaska to develop oil spill response and prevention plan

Last week, the Arctic Council's Task Force on Arctic Marine Oil Pollution Preparedness and Response met in Girdwood to continue talks about developing a so-called instrument of cooperation on marine oil pollution preparedness and response in the Arctic. This was the task force's third meeting, after two meetings have been held in Oslo last October and in St. Petersburg in December.

While details of the instrument have not been released, Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell, the state's liaison to federal government on Arctic Council said that the agreement is still in the negotiation stages. "This meeting [in Girdwood] has promised several things," Treadwell told the Nome Nugget. "We talked about expedited international cooperation in the event of oil spills, ironing out legal matters and having drills.'

In May 2011 the Arctic Council decided to establish a task force to develop an international instrument on Arctic marine oil pollution preparedness and response to develop recommendations and best practices because there is no Arctic marine oil pollution response plan in existence.

The results of the task force are supposed to be presented to the next Arctic Council's ministerial meeting in 2013. Treadwell said that task force talks last week involved having regular drills between nations on how to assist each other in the event of an oil spill and that those drills would serve to identify and cure deficiencies in proper responses.

The agreement also entails legal matters that would make it easier to move people and goods across borders in the event that international cooperation is necessary to respond to a spill. "The instrument is also aimed at oil spill prevention," Treadwell said.

When asked what Bering Strait residents can expect from state or federal authorities, Treadwell said that he strongly made the point during the meeting to involve locals.

One of the most important lessons of the Exxon Valdez [oil spill] was that shippers and the people involved in the response didn't know each other before the accident," Treadwell said. The lesson learned, Treadwell said, was that the immediate response to the oil spill would have been more effective if there had been practices ahead of time between the shippers through Prince William Sound and the fishermen who were Islands and growing in the Bering Strait, where vessels are transiting waters near our shores without any contact whatsoever with our coastal authorities – those people who would be first to respond under the proposed oil spill agreement," Treadwell

"I also told the group that subsistence resources such as fish, whales, seals or walrus are vitally important

"I told the group that subsistence resources such as fish, whales, seals or walrus are vitally important to the diet and lifestyle of our people and that it must be understood by every shipper going through the Bering Strait."

- Mead Treadwell owners of the large number of vessels that were used in the response and cleanup.

"In this agreement, we urge to do everything we can to involve the local communities," Treadwell said of the agreement now worked out with the Arctic Council's task force.

In Treadwell's welcome address to the task force last week, he said that the US and Alaska have very stringent regulatory requirements when it comes to offshore oil and gas drilling. In contrast, shipping is not regulated beyond International Maritime Organization conventions. "We to the diet and lifestyle of our people and that it must be understood by every shipper going through the Bering Strait," Treadwell said.

At the time of the interview, Treadwell was en route to Louisiana for the christening of the icebreaker Aiviq, an arctic class offshore service Icebreaker commissioned by Shell oil and built in LaRose, Louisiana. Treadwell as well as U.S. Senator Lisa Murkowski were on hand to celebrate the christening of the 360-foot

While Shell is moving ahead with its plans to explore for oil and gas in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas, even to the extent of building its own icebreaker, politicians like Treadwell are pleading with Washington to recognize that the U.S. is an Arctic nation and that the country is missing the boat when it comes to staking its claim in the north. Not only to take advantage of resource development six out of eight arctic nations are drilling for oil offshore - but also governance and thus having a say in now activities are or aren't regulated.

In testimony held before the U.S. House of Representatives' Committee on transportation and infrastructure, Treadwell asked Congress to look at the bigger picture of ramifications that the historic climatic changes in the Arctic bring. He identified the need for more heavy icebreakers to operate in the Arctic and the need of legal measures to protect Alaskan shores from the dangers of unregulated itinerant vessels carrying hazardous cargo near the U.S. coast-

Of concern in this region is the unsettling certainty of more ship traffic to squeeze through the bottleneck that is the Bering Strait. Waters in the Bering Sea and the Bering Strait are under the jurisdiction of the U.S. and Russia out to 200-miles and follow a 1990 maritime boundary agreement. Russia has yet to ratify the agreement but has abided by its terms. A portion of the central Bering Sea, the socalled "Donut Hole," falls outside of each nation's 200-mile Exclusive Economic Zone limit and is considered to be international waters. Foreign vessels cannot enter another nation's internal waters, but their freedom of navigation is not restricted through the Bering Strait. This is so because of guiding international principles guaranteeing freedom of navigation of the seas.

With the so-called innocent passage, any vessel can transit the Bering Strait and does not have to make its presence or its cargo

Treadwell said that equally important as the task force's meeting last week was the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 17 that urged ships crossing the Bering Strait and Aleutian regions to voluntarily engage local authorities in contingency planning. It also calls on vessels transiting the region to have adequate oil spill contingency plans and response capacity for marine oil spills "that acknowledge the critical role of response organizations, indigenous people, state and local governments, and response organizations in preparedness and re-

The resolution says that the Alaska State Legislature recognizes the importance of cooperation among Arctic nations and the efforts of the Arctic Council's task force to develop effective plans and that it recognizes the usefulness of joint training exercises, the exchange of information and experience regarding marine pollution preparedness and response.

Members of the House passed a joint resolution that urges the U.S. Congress to fund all facilities and vessels necessary for the U.S. Coast Guard to fulfill its missions in the Arctic. This includes icebreakers and an Arctic USCG base. While much talk is spent on the need to beef up the meager fleet of icebreakers in the U.S. Coast Guard's arsenal, the University of Fairbank's global ice capable research vessel R/V Sikuliaq is nearing completion and is slated for a launch ceremony in October 2012.

The Sikuliaq is a 261-foot oceanographic research ship capable of bringing scientists to the ice-choked waters of Alaska and the polar regions. When complete, the vessel will be one of the most advanced university research vessels in the world and will be able to break ice up to 2.5 feet thick. Currently under construction at Marinette Marine Corporation, a shipyard in Marinette, Wisconsin, the Sikuliaq will be ready for science operations in 2014 and will be home ported in Alaska, at UAF's Seward Marine Center in Seward. The Sikuliaq is expected to arrive in Seward in late 2013.

UAF team builds dream, clean snowmachine

Nomeite Isaac Thompson son of Cheryl and Roger, is an electrical engineering student at the University of Alaska in Fairbanks. The electrical engineering department fielded a team of student innovators to take part in a competition sponsored by the Society of Automotive Engineers Clean Snowmobile Challenge in Thompson said the project took about one year, starting with a Ski-Doo Renegade XP chassis and converting it to run on electric power. "We used a DC motor and 72 battery packs taken from radio control helicopters. These were wired together to build a battery pack that could be charged to 200 volts to convert power from the batteries into power that the motor can use. The motor controller acts the same as a carburetor in an internal combustion machine, and regulates how fast the machine goes.

"Another piece that we had to build for the machine was a battery management system. This is an onboard computer that monitors the voltage of every cell in the battery pack, and displays the information on a small television screen mounted in the dash."

The competition took place in Houghton, Michigan, very near Michigan Tech. It took place between March 5-10.

The competition is graded on ma "We also built a motor controller, chine weight, range, pulling power, handling and noise, as well as a design paper, an oral presentation, MSRP defense and static display.

The UAF team won seven of the nine events, and took first place overall. "We would have won the range event as well, but we were disqualified from the event because we weren't ready in time. The night before, one of the judges had been riding the machine and blew up the motor, so we had to replace it. By the time we had the new motor finished in the machine shop and installed in the machine, we were too late to compete for points in the event, but still drove 15.2 miles before the battery went dead, while the other team only made 9.8 miles

NSEDC energy subsidy cuts $1.34 million from residents' utility bills. Nearly 2,700 households benefit with $500 credit toward electric utility accounts

NOME — As the Norton Sound/ Bering Strait region emerges from a winter that saw one of the most brutal cold streaks in its recorded weather history, Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation is proud to announce the completion of its 2012 Energy Subsidy program.

Nearly 2,700 households registered to receive the $500 subsidy which was applied to electric utility accounts in NSEDC's 15 member communities. At a December 2011 meeting, NSEDC's Board of Directors unanimously agreed to provide the subsidy for households. The decision proved to be prescient as severely cold weather in January put further pressure on already stretched budgets.

'We at NSEDC understand the burden that high energy costs place on our residents, especially when an extremely cold winter requires us all to depend on our heaters and electrical devices all the more just to get by," said NSEDC Board Chairman Dan Harrelson. "We hope the extra help this winter will ease the bite of high utility bills a bit as NSEDC and our partners throughout the region work to lower the cost of energy for all our communities and residents."

Following the completion of a registration effort that involved six utility providers, NSEDC Community Outreach Liaisons and NSEDC staff, NSEDC paid more than $1.34 million to credit $500 toward electric utility accounts for 2,689 households in the Norton Sound/Bering Strait region. That is $1.34 million that residents will be able to direct toward other needs and priorities.

NSEDC would like to thank utility providers Diomede Joint Utilities, Golovin Power Utilities, Unalakleet Valley Electric Cooperative, White Mountain Utilities, Alaska Village Electric Cooperative and Nome Joint Utility System for all their work and cooperation in implementing the 2012 subsidy program. In community after community, elders and young alike walked in -30-degree temperatures to sign up for the subsidy. NSEDC would also like to thank residents for taking the time and braving the cold to regis-

The 2012 effort mirrored a similar subsidy granted in 2008. Both subsidies were approved by NSEDC's Board of Directors as isolated contributions to residents and were not construed to be ongoing or yearly programs. The subsidies complement NSEDC's long-term efforts to bring down energy costs in the region which include NSEDC's Community Energy Fund, its bulk fuel purchasing program and region-wide energy planning efforts in coordination with other entities.

The Community Energy Fund allots $1 million to each of NSEDC's 15 member communities to apply toward the construction or improvement of alternative or more efficient energy systems. Through the Consolidated Bulk Fuel Purchasing program, NSEDC procures more competitively priced fuel for vendors in its member communities by purchasing the fuel in bulk and charging no interest nor administration fees.

Unalakleet girls win seventh straight team trophy at the 34th annual BSSD Ski and Biathlon Championships

by Keith Conger

An iron clad dynasty continued at the Bering Strait School District Ski and Biathlon Championships as the junior high girls from Unalakleet continued one of the most impressive victory streaks in Western Alaska ski history by claiming their seventh straight team trophy.

The team was lead by eighth grader Ally Daniels who captured her second Skimeister award (skiing's equivalent to the MVP), winning the 4K ski race by a whopping 5:24. Hitting a near perfect 9 out of 10. Daniels won the biathlon race by an unthinkable eight minutes.

Had Daniels been in the boys division she would have won silver medals in both events.

Domination was also a theme for the 60 plus participants who competed in four different divisions at the 34th annual championships, held this past weekend in White Moun-

White Mountain's hometown here, junior Asa Bergamaschi, took control of the high school boys field on the first day, winning the 7.5K ski race by nearly 4 minutes.

Fresh off impressive results at the Arctic Winter Games in Whitehorse, Canada, Bergamaschi followed that up on day two by winning the 6K biathlon race by nearly five minutes. After a pair of second place finishes for the Skimeister award the past two years, Bergamaschi captured his first BSSD high school Skimeister award.

In two high school girls division races, Arctic Winter Games gold medalist Caity Tozier, a senior from Nome, won the 7.5K ski race by a margin of two minutes. After hitting 7 of 10 targets, she won the 6K biathlon race by over one minute. The efforts helped her capture her second BSSD Skimeister award.

Tozier's times were so impressive that had she been entered in the high school boys division, they would have placed her fourth in both events.

Seventh grader Sikulik Johnson of Unalakleet ruled the junior high boys division. Johnson captured his first Skimeister award by winning the 4K-ski race by over three minutes, and after hitting a perfect 10 out of 10 shots, the biathlon race by over four minutes.

Marksmanship awards in the high school divisions went to Quinn Tozier, of Nome, and Linda Kimoktoak of Koyuk. Junior high division winners were Teller's Chester Topkok, and Amanda Homekingkeo of

For the high school divisions, who shoot without resting their rifles on stands, there were no perfect scores in the biathlon. In the junior high divisions there were six athletes who shot a perfect 10 out of 10: Unalakleet's Sikulik Johnson, Koyuk's Robin Baxter, Saint Michael's John Washington, Stebbins' Micah Henry, Koyuk's Homekingkeo, and Shishmaref's Sylvia Nayokpuk.

Hofstetter finishes Iditarod Trail Invitational

The Iditarod Trail Invitational is an endurance race along the Iditarod trail that takes bikers, skiers and runners from the start in Knik over the Alaska Range to the finish in Mc-Grath, 350 miles up the trail. Some bikers and walkers attempted to go all the way to Nome but turned around due to lots of snow and poor trail conditions.

Phil Hofstetter of Nome finished second place, 3 hours behind six-

They are experienced competitors in state and international competitions. The team has one addition with experienced competitor freshman Emory Booshu a wrestling state champion ,and like Caity Tozier a medalist at the recent Arctic Winter games. These competitors enjoy the cross training they get from training for Native Games. Rounding out the team are Oliver Hogendorn and Andrea Irrigoo both athletes working on improving their skills.

This season competitive circuit begins with a meet at the Bethel Invitational on March 29 and 30. At craft booths and two performances by Pamyua! The Nome Senior NYO team will be testing their skills and competition will include Jr. NYOers of Joni Earp's successful team. Tickets to the Pamyua concert will be available for purchase throughout the day during the NYO events and at a discount for those who come to watch the athletes.

The Nanooks then travel to Dillingham for an invitational in their area. This meet should have the team prepared for the Sate Competition in Anchorage April 27, 28 and

First Tae Kwon Do sparring camp held in Nome

Nome Tae Kwon Do's first Iditarod Sparring camp was held at the Nome Recreation Center and the two advanced competitors were Michael Tocktoo, 12, and Caroline Teal, 13, of Anchorage. Caroline has been coming to Nome during Iditarod with Alaska Missions and is from Extreme Taekwondo in Anchorage. Last year as a red belt she placed third in nationals. Caroline received her juvenile black belt last December and it was a very good opportunity for Michael to compete at her black belt level.

The match was very surprising to all. Michael showed skill levels never before seen with jumping spinning double kicks to body and head and it was a close match every day compared to last year when Caroline's skills were far above his. The final match ended with Caroline pulling ahead with a flurry of kicks after Michael and completed an amazing jumping spinning double Shingles: Should you get the vaccine?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

If you are age 60 or older, your doctor may ask you whether or not you would like to receive a vaccination for shingles.

Shingles is a painful rash forming over one part of the body caused by the same virus that causes chicken shingles Α vaccine is recommended by the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices to reduce the risk of shingles and its associated pain in people 60 years old or older.

Many people have asked if this "shingles vaccine" is right for them, and if so, at what age they should receive the immunization. Only you and your medical provider can answer these questions, but a little background information may help guide the discussion.

Shingles is caused by the varicella zoster virus (VZV). Prior to 1995 when a vaccine against VZV became available in the United States, most people were exposed to the chicken pox virus in childhood, thereby developing a life-long immunity. Now most children receive the chicken pox vaccine series starting at age one.

After a childhood chicken pox infection or vaccination, most people never suffer from the virus again. However in some people, for unknown reasons, the varicella virus remains dormant within the long nerves of the body until some trigger allows for a localized outbreak of the virus, called shingles.

These outbreaks are usually isolated to the skin served by the nerve in which the virus has remained dormant. The outbreak starts as a focal area of pain or burning followed by a characteristic blistering rash over the affected strip of skin. In most cases the pain subsides in 2-10 days, but in a small percentage of patients, the outbreak can lead to a long-term pain syndrome called post-herpetic neuralgia.

Outbreaks usually occur in persons over age 60 with at least 50 percent of people who reach age 85 experiencing at least one attack. Younger people with a weakened immune system caused by illness or immunosuppressive medical therapy may also experience attacks of Shingles is treated with antiviral medication and pain medication to reduce the duration and severity of the outbreak.

A person with an active shingles rash is contagious and must avoid contact with others who could be harmed by a VZV infection particularly infants, pregnant women, and anyone with a compromised immune system.

In theory, the shingles vaccine helps boost the immunity of a person who has had prior VZV exposure. The vaccine is approved by the FDA for administration to adults aged 60 and over.

Early studies on the vaccine show that it reduces the incidence of shingles by 51 percent and the feared complication of post-herpetic neuralgia by 66.5 percent.

Like many other vaccines, large numbers of people must be vaccinated to realize a benefit in the whole population. According to research, 59 people have to receive the shingles vaccine to pre-DOCTOR vent one outbreak of shingles, and 364 people have to receive the vaccine to prevent one case of postherpetic neuralgia. Given that the risks associated with receiving the vaccine are minimal, there is likely little harm in giving the vaccine to large numbers of people; however, because so many have to be immunized to prevent one outbreak, experts debate on whether the vaccine is cost effective.

The effectiveness of the vaccine for persons younger than age 60 is unknown, though the FDA has approved the vaccine for anyone age 50 or older. The CDC recommends the vaccine for people age 60 and home with his wife Peggy Mulligan and family members around him on February 14, 2012, just two weeks before his 95th birthday. There will be a memorial at 2 p.m. on March 31 in the basement of the Douglas Methodist Church.

John was born in Woodbury, New York on February 28, 1917, the oldest of three brothers and a sister. His father and mother (Matthew Mulligan and Bridget Duffy) were both born in Ireland and immigrated to the United States as adults. John learned to shoot, hunt and fish as a child and continued to put game and fish on the table into his 80s. He started a life-long career in mining as a helper for two miners blasting a road cut at the age of 12 in 1929.

During and after high school he worked at farming, trapping, well drilling and construction. In 1937 he began underground work as a mucker and a driller on tunnels, dams and mines in the northeastern and southern states, Alaska and Cal-

John enlisted in the Army Engineers in 1942 and was placed in charge of a weather station near Egedesminde, Greenland until the war ended in 1945. While in Greenland he lived in an Eskimo community, learning the Eskimo language and some of the techniques of the traditional Eskimo hunters. He retained an admiration for Eskimo culture and the traditional hunting-based lifestyle. John was discharged in 1945, enrolled under the GI bill in the Missouri School of Mines in 1946 and graduated in June of 1949 with a degree in Mining Engineering. He was hired by the US Bureau of Mines in July of 1949 and worked there until he retired in 1985.

For most of his career with the Bureau he discovered and mapped mineral resources throughout Alaska, spending 3-4 months in the field collecting samples during the summer and analyzing the samples and writing reports in the winter. In 1959 and 1960 he spent half the year in Antarctica searching for coal deposits. While in Antarctica, he discovered a coal deposit on a mountain near MacKay Glacier that is now named Mulligan Peak in his honor.

In 1970 he became chief of Field Operations for the Bureau in Alaska and focused on gathering mineral data to support the land decisions mandated by the Native Land Claims Act. John was always a strong, independent advocate for mining: during his career in the Bureau he started by being investigated by Senator McCarthy and ended up opposing some of the policies of both the Carter and Reagan administrations. In retirement John travelled, developed an interest in genealogy and wrote biographies for the Miner's Hall of Fame. He remained fiercely independent, doing solo winter car-

Earl Tumbloo

Anchorage Resident, Earl Tumbloo, 59 died in Anchorage on March 23, 2012 at Alaska Native Medical Center.

Earl was born on August 2, 1952 in Savoonga, Alaska. He has also lived in Nenana, Fairbanks, Copper Center, and Anchorage. Earl graduated from the Lathrop High School in Fairbanks soon after he began his career with the United States Postal Service where he served as a Postmaster as well as a postal trainer; he retired in Copper Center in October 2011. Earl enjoyed making jam and being with friends, he loved fly tying, fishing, hunting, smoking and jarring fish.

His family wrote, "Earl was an honest and loving man who lived his life with integrity and honor. He was very caring towards his family and friends and was always there when you needed him. He had a great sense of humor and made people feel comfortable immediately. He was an outdoors enthusiast of hunting and fishing allowing him to be a great provider to many. Earl also had a soft side to him and was sentimental, as well as loved to listen to music. He touched many peoples and had friends everywhere. He had stories that were vivid in detail. He loved to watch NCIS, Cheers, make slingshots, smoke salmon, camping and boating while taking pictures. Earl also loved to play his Gameboy and tying flies. But most of all he loved being outside with family and friends. He made our hearts fuller, our laughter heartier and our lives so blessed.'

He is survived by his daughters Heather (Inaay) Tumbloo, Stacey Tumbloo-Wages, Lisa Tumbloo, and Anya Tumbloo. His three sons Ronald Tumbloo, Jesse Tumbloo, and Benjamin Tumbloo. Also Apa's special girl Gabriella Tumbloo, Earl was blessed with grandchildren, nieces, nephews and cousins too numerous to list. He left behind four sisters, Karen Nguyen, Norma Nicholson, Debbie Pungowiyi and Denise Crosby. Earl also leaves two brothers, Delbert Pungowiyi and Dennis Pungowiyi. The family also wants to mention Cesar and Rosie Vaughan, and Shirley Moses, as well as many other family friends on St. Lawrence Island.

Funeral Services will be held March 31, at the First Native Baptist Church, 802 East Third Street in Anchorage. A viewing will begin at 9 a.m. with the service beginning at 10 a.m. A pot luck reception is to be announced following the services. A cremation for Earl will follow the services

Saying It Sincerely

Pastor Karen Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church Member, Nome Ministerial Association

As a young child I can remember every year during the holidays we would put a big bowl of nuts out on the table in our living room. I never would see such a display except this time of year: Brazil nuts, almonds, hazel nuts, and walnuts. The shells were each unique and it would take different methods to break through them to get to the heart of the nut. Some required a few taps on the table, others the use of a metal nut cracker, others required a hammer and a sound swing of weight to break through the shell and get to the heart or "fruit" of the nut.

God's word and message is meant to break through the shells we humans form around our hearts. So often we build a "hard shell " around our deepest self as a way to protect ourselves from the pain we have experienced in the past. This is a good defense mechanism and can serve us well for a period of time. But eventually the shell can itself become an obstacle; become so hardened that we cannot experience the life and relationships we long for and need. We become negative toward our life, others and our community.

I have seen this over the years in my pastoral ministry and I have no easy answer to it. Two people may both experience a terrible hardship or injustice in their past. It may be small, it may be quite big. One person gradually faces it, names it, grieves it and then lets go of it; the other person, becomes embittered and forms strong walls around themselves —a shell — that prevents them from opening up to receive any power of acceptance or new growth. They are hard to be around and many people avoid them.

We hear about it in another way in John 12: "Unless a grain of wheat falls into the earth and dies, it remains just a single grain; but if it lives, it bears much fruit." Or in the Psalms: "create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me.'

A right spirit comes from God's grace that teaches us forgiveness and compassion toward ourselves and others even though we and they may not deserve it. By this power we can be freed up to live in such a way that no longer does our past have a negative power over us. Instead God makes something new out of our past, something strong and beautiful is revealed as the shell falls and disintegrates. Through this new life that God gives us, grace and mature love can be made visible to others who also may benefit.

As we near Good Friday, the day of Jesus' death, and Easter, the day of his resurrection, will you pray with me: "O God soften our hearts, tear down the barriers we build up so new life can spring forth from us and we can live in the freedom of your grace."

Out of total frustration I am writing this letter after discussing the issue with the IRA President, Ronald Kirk for it has been 14 years now since the City of Stebbins was authorized by the IRA Council in 1997/1998 to oversee the Planning and Construction Management of the Water and Sewer Project for the community of Stebbins. To this date the City of Stebbins is still not in compliance with essential indicators as established by the Rural Utility Business Advisor (RUBA) program. This is very important because without compliance to these essentials the grants already received cannot be reimbursed as they are spent by the project. Future grant released would be depended on how quickly the indicators are resolved.

There are other essentials and set backs as mentioned in the letter of September 22, 2011 from Senior Engineer, Brad Blackstone. The City of Stebbins does not have an approved Community Development Plan. These are both shot down by the State of Alaska.

Everyone is aware that the road to the clear lake is unsafe and dangerous to haul water each spring. For future project it was recommended for the City of Stebbins to file for a Community Development Grant this year to address this issue but nothing has been filed by the administra-

Minor Consuming Alcohol and Probation Viola-tion. Additional charges of Criminal Mischief 4, Assault 4, and Resisting Arrest are pending. Ku-lowiyi was remanded to AMCC.

On March 25, approximately 10:30 p.m., the Unalakleet State Troopers responded to a residence in Stebbins for a reported domestic disturbance. Investigation revealed, Veronica Tee, 50, of Stebbins broke out three windows to a house that belonged to a family member during an argument. Tee also broke some personal items belonging to the family member while in the residence. Tee was arrest for two counts of criminal mischief in the third degree, two counts of criminal mischief in the fourth degree and one count of criminal mischief in the fifth degree, which are all domestic violence, related crimes. Tee was held at the Stebbins Police Department Holding Facility pending arraignment. Alcohol was a factor. tion to date.

The reason for the SOA to disapprove the CDP submitted is that the proposed user fees are high at $135 per month which exceeds household income threshold and that the cost of the total project at $40.5 million is too high.

Bluntly, we are almost right back to where we were at the beginning of the project in 1998. This means that the City of Stebbins now has to figure out alterative methods to bring down the household user fees add to reduce the scope of the project to a level that is acceptable to the SOA and to the community of Stebbins.

Another concern of RUBA is the collection of the outstanding receivable of the City of Stebbins regarding solid and liquid waste disposal. This has to be zeroed out before the SOA can consider the City of Stebbins as a good investment.

I was so surprised to see my solid and liquid waste bill from the City of Stebbins. Everyone got one without one word of explanation. This is totally unacceptable because without a Memorandum of Agreement collection of the total debt would be near impossible. You and I know that each household will not convey their Permanent Funds over to the City of Stebbins to clear up this receivable although a few might. What's so difficult about going house to house as recommended to establish a payment plan to resolve this serious outstanding debt?

I am told by Lura Deahu of Community and Regional Affairs that it was recommended that a letter of explanation be sent to each household and that sample letter and forms were provided to the administrator for her use. City Administrator monthly activity reports aren't even related to previous directives from the City Council nor related to the concerns at hand.

If we are lucky the city may get a foundation built for the Water Treatment Facility this coming construction season of 2012 and nothing else. One year gone again. Another construction season with no change from the previous year. How much longer can our members and residents wait before the Mayor and City Council get serious about our living conditions as compared to other villages?

The last 14 years all the villages in the Bering Straits got their water and sewer in place and neighboring villages in the Yukon all have water and sewer except Stebbins. Stebbins is the largest native village in the region. Stebbins has the largest native enrollment in the region. Stebbins brings in more money from the Federal Government into Kawerak, Inc., Norton Sound Health Corporation including Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium on a per capita basis compared to the other villages

Notice of Intent to Repatriate

The National Museum of Natural History of the Smithsonian Institution plans to repatriate the following to the Native Villages of Gambell and

Three funerary objects dating to the historic period were acquired from undocumented locations on St. Lawrence Island, Alaska, by Dr. Riley D. Moore of the U.S. National Museum (later National Museum of Natural History) in 1912. Archaeologist Henry B. Collins of the Smithsonian Institution collected 9 funerary objects at historic sites on the Punuk Islands, a chain of small islets located 5 miles off the northeastern side of St. Lawrence Island. Collins acquired an additional 60 funerary objects at historic sites at Cape Kialegak (Kiyalighaq) on the southeastern end of St. Lawrence Island in 1929. After a review of the available evidence, the historic period funerary objects have been found to be culturally affiliated to the Native Villages of Gambell and

In total, 72 funerary objects in 25 catalog entries will be repatriated to the Native Villages of Gambell and Savoonga.

Notice of Intent to Repatriate

The National Museum of Natural History of the Smithsonian Institution plans to repatriate the following to the Native Village of Shishmaref:

The human remains of an estimated 27 individuals were acquired from burials unearthed at the old village site of Shishmaref and in the vicinity of the current village of Shishmaref, Alaska, in 1926 by Aleš Hrdlička of the Smithsonian Institution. Skeletal remains of 9 individuals, 5 funerary objects, and 1 non-statutory object were incorporated into the collections of the U.S. National Museum (later National Museum of Natural History) through a 1927 gift from George Goshaw who disinterred the remains and objects from the old village site of Shishmaref and part of its cemetery. Archaeologist Henry B. Collins of the U.S. National Museum collected an additional 12 human remains from burial sites at Old Shishmaref in 1929. After a review of the available evidence, the human remains, funerary objects, and nonstatutory object have been found to be culturally affiliated to the Native Village of Shishmaref.

A total of 48 human remains in 50 catalog entries, 5 funerary objects in 2 catalog entries, and 1 non-statutory object in 1 catalog entry will be repatriated to the Native Village of Shishmaref.

For more information, please contact Lars Krutak before April 30, 2012, at (202) 633-0869, Repatriation Office, Smithsonian Institution, P.O. Box 37012, NMNH MRC 138, Washington, D.C. 20013-7012.

I cannot think of any justifiable reason as to why the City of Stebbins can't get their act together to overcome obstacles before them for 14 years. This is totally outright embarrassing.

Furthermore the community streets for Stebbins IRA were scheduled for this year including St. Michael but now it's only St. Michael that will get worked on this summer. Stebbins was third on the list of 17 villages in the Bering Strait Region now Stebbins' road schedule is going backwards while other villages are moving up on the road schedule. We simply cannot move forward until our water and sewer service lines are constructed under the community streets.

There is a legal Planning and Construction Management agreement in place dated back to 1997 between the City of Stebbins and Stebbins Community Association that provided the City of Stebbins seven years with three years grace period to complete the planning and construction of the Water and Sewer Project and that if the City of Stebbins is unable to complete the planning and construction of the project due to long standing non-compliance of the City of Stebbins. Regarding financial, I would recommend to the City of Stebbins to begin annual audits beginning the last fiscal year of 2011.

Because of my concerns regarding the water and sewer project I recently applied for a vacant seat on the city council hoping that I may be instrumental and helpful due to my education and experience in dealing with the public and funding agencies but the council majority thought it would be best for the City of Stebbins and the project to select someone else with less experience and education while the city is facing very difficult problems. To date there is not one letter that I'm aware of from City of Stebbins to the State legislation requesting assistance in funding the water and sewer project.

I have enclosed the letter from Blackstone, Senior Engineer regarding the obstacles to the project so that you see for yourself. I will post this letter to the public as reference to my letter since it is public information. Membership and residents alike have the right to know the real situation. Too many times the public is made to believe everything is fine and on schedule while administrative work is not done. The transfer of oversight from the City of Stebbins to Stebbins Community Association will be on the IRA agenda and will be discussed at the next IRA meeting.

Thank you.
Sincerely,
Mr. Morris Cofffey

Piracy worries summer season gold seekers

By Sandra L. Medearis

They don't know how many to expect in the oncoming rush of gold seekers—50, maybe 500 or more to live their dream—but federal, state and local agencies want to be ready. Alaska State Troopers, state Dept. of Natural Resources, Nome Police Dept. and U.S. Coast Guard representatives met with miners and interested community members March 29 at Old St. Joe's to inform and learn concerns on offshore mining issues.

The group included DNR Commissioner Dan Sullivan.

"We want to establish a presence to understand the issues and learn how we can work together with local government, state agencies and the federal government," Sullivan said. Being prepared includes solving situations involving boundary disputes, claim-jumping and gold pirating, as well as enforcement issues stemming from people moving into an area where they are unfamiliar with regulations and the ways of mining and the rights of subsistence fishermen, community members said. Add to these enforcement for safety of miners and the community.

The hullabaloo and a Henny-Penny feeling in some quarters that the sky is falling down stems from an interest in gold stimulated by high gold prices and the "Bering Sea Gold" program featuring fabulous cleanups of gold dredges on Discovery Channel. Victims of gold fever seem to be calling any agency with a phone number that starts with 443-to get more information about coming to Nome to suck up a solution to financial worries from the bottom of the Bering Sea.

The answers to issues arising from the gold seeking activity will be based more on education than on enforcement, considering the dedication of resources to the gold rush. Each agency said they were stretched thin on safety and enforcement issues, but hoped that they could complement efforts of agencies by working together.

DNR plans to have one employee present in Nome for the entire season. The DNR is working on educating people to what to expect if they undertake a mining venture.

"Our phones are ringing incessantly," Brent Goodrum, director of DNR Division of Mining Land and

Port panel avoids a head-on with mayor

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Port Commission has done a switcheroo and baited up their legislative priority list for $50 million to help pay for causeway extension at Port of Nome.

Stuck with what they thought was an either-or proposition, either try for $50 million from a state government obligation bond or try for money in the capital budget for modifications and repairs to the existing port, the commission had decided to go with repair money. This put them at odds with efforts by Mayor Denise Michels in getting the money to enhance Nome's chances for a deep water port and to become a big player with a port to serve resource development.

The mayor wanted their backing by putting causeway extension at the top of their priority list, but the panel did not want to risk the harbor modification capital budget money for the possible $50 million that was to extend the causeway into deeper water, but would only partly pay for the job, commissioners said.

Go for the big fish too, Mayor Denise Michels, told the commissioners last week. Michels, who has been pushing port interests in Juneau along with Nome's lobbyist Wendy Chamberlain, said she is fishing in two separate funding ponds. It is not either/or, she said.

In response to a request from Gov. Sean Parnell, the legislature is putting together a bond package to go before voters this fall. In it is port money for port development

NPFMC says revised chum salmon bycatch study needs

By Laurie McNicholas

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council called for revisions in an initial review draft environmental assessment of proposed management measures for chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery during a meeting March 30 in Anchorage. Another initial review draft will be prepared. The council took similar action on the original review draft of the document at a meeting in June 2011 in Nome, asking staff to analyze additional alternatives for chum salmon bycatch management and bring a revised draft back to the council for initial review.

Last week the council adopted a motion by Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game Commissioner Cora Campbell that included a number of modifications to the Rolling Hot Spot (RHS) system. The RHS provides salmon bycatch information so the pollock fleet can avoid areas of high chum or Chinook salmon bycatch rates.

In 2005 regulations implemented under Amendment 84 to the Bering Sea Aleutian Islands Fishery Management Plan exempted pollock vessels from closures of both the Chum and Chinook Salmon Savings Areas if they participate in an RHS Intercooperative Agreement (ICA) approved by the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS). The ICA was amended for the 2011 season to remove regulations related to the Chinook Salmon Savings Area and all provisions under the ICA related to Chinook bycatch management following implementation of Amendment 91, which established a Chinook bycatch management plan.

The ICA uses a system of base bycatch rates to assign vessels to certain tiers based on bycatch rates relative to the base rate, and implements area closures for vessels in certain tiers. Parties to the current RHS include American Fisheries Act pollock cooperatives and Community Development Quota groups.

Campbell said the requests for modifications to the RHS included in the motion are based on a proposal that industry representatives brought to the council's Advisory Panel. She noted that the motion is largely derived from recommendations by the panel.

"...I want to make it clear that my expectation is that the industry will come together and develop an ICA proposal that they think is workable and bring that to the analysts so that they can analyze an ICA proposal in contrast to the existing ICA," Campbell added.

John Gruver of United Catcher Boats manages the RHS ICA. He developed the list of RHS modifications provided to the Advisory Panel. Last week he told the council points on the list are concepts, are not intended for staff analysis, and it would be best for industry representatives to get together this spring to flesh out a revised RHS program to give to analysts. He said elements of the RHS are hardwired in regulation under Amendment 84, and the program requires regulatory change because it is not flexible. Gauvin noted that chum bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery soared to more than 191,000 fish in 2011, and 30,000 chums were taken as bycatch in June alone.

Alternative 3 in the current review draft deals with triggered closures and the RHS exemption. The alternative would create new boundaries for the Chum Salmon Savings Area. The motion the council approved last week makes component 1 of alternative 3 a separate alternative (new alternative 3), and creates a new alternative 4 that includes components 1 through 6 of the former alternative 3.

"It was hard to tell from the analysis how you might consider the RHS versus something where you had these triggered closures layered on top of it," Campbell said. "It's a better structure for the analysis [to] separate it out this way."

Recreational mining permit law in the works

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council is considering an ordinance to require a permit to conduct recreational mining activity and to establish fees.

The City limits go 1.63 miles straight out from the shore and run five miles along the beach, which means the City can regulate mining offshore to include state DNR-designated recreational mining areas off East Beach and West Beach. The city has the right to demand a permit, its attorney said at a meeting last week.

The DNR has decided to allow an unlimited number of people to go on City property to extract minerals, City Attorney Brooks Chandler told the Council. Yet the community of Nome has to allow the State of Alaska reasonable access to develop the resource. The City has the authority to require permits of anyone to conduct activities within municipal boundaries and can have rules on the use of the port, according to Chandler.

If passed in the current form, recreational miners would have to get a permit from the City and pay $750 to $1,000 for each year they mined. The permit would cover the season starting June 1 and ending Dec. 31. An additional cost would be a $25 processing fee.

For purposes of the ordinance, a "recreational miner' would be a person who is required to obtain a land use or recreational mining permit ral Resources to conduct mining within the City.

OPINION

The city tax administrator may no, shall, Councilwoman Mary Knodel suggested-require that the applicant submit copies of all activity reports provided to state departments of Fish and Game, Natural Resources, Commerce and Environmental Conservation for the previous year or other state or federal agency or private landowner where the tax administrator has reason to believe the miner is out of compliance with the ordinance.

The draft ordinance asked for a fee of $750, but that was not enough, Knodel said, $1,000 nonrefundable fee was more appropriate.

"They are going on our property, our port and in our community and can get on an airplane and leave a mess," she said. "If they are not ready to fork over, they shouldn't use our facilities or property, otherwise property owners will pay."

The proposed ordinance allows the City to inspect the miner's books if there is a question of inaccurate records. All information would be kept confidential unless needed in a criminal or civil action to enforce the ordinance. Each miner would have to keep for three years the records of business activities within the City.

Denial of permits could be ap-

The permit would not be transferable.

The ordinance is not yet ready for the Council action agenda. The measure still needs work, Knodel said.

Ahead of the Curve?

What's in store for Nome this summer? Are our city planners in front of the curve or behind the eight ball? We are looking at an unknown number of gold stampeders heading our way. How many? We don't know. Where will they stay? We hear tales of a "man camp" out by Dredge #6. Do we think we can confine a bunch of young white males behind camp fences? Will our sons and daughters be able to walk on Front Street? Will we have to lock our vehicles and homes? Will our food bank stay solvent? How will we handle the guys who go broke? Will we have increased drug problems? We are told that Nome businesses will get rich mining the miners. Maybe we'll sell a lot more burritos and coffee. Will we be able to use our Rec Center or will the stampeders be using it as a public bathhouse? Will Soap and Suds be able to handle the laundry demand (if these guys are into clean clothes)? Will the restrooms at City Hall be able to handle the mother

We don't know the numbers heading our way, but we don't have to be a genius to see the potential problems, and we should be smart enough to be prepared. We also need to have better communications with our state agencies. The state needs to stay informed and get a grip on what is happening in Nome — they seem to think Nomeites are still living in the 1950s. Some potential want-to-be-lease-holders are already angry about the DNR's lease sales to South African and Canadian big mining interests. They feel the little guys are left out. We also have potential small miners who are miffed that there are no mining and diving supply stores in Nome.

We need to get information out to the potential gold rush crowd to the State if Alaska and to the citizens of Nome. Time's a wasting. Plans need to be in place. The stampeders will be on top of us before the ice goes out. Are we in front of the curve or behind the eight ball?

Dear Editor,

I wanted to let you know that I think you and your staff of women plus two men do an excellent job with the daily except MO, TU, WD, FR, SA and SU. The old Nome Nugget under Wilfred Boucher, editor was published MO, WD and FR.

My father was a newspaperman for half his life. That is something I wanted to do but not very much.

My friend in Nome, Mary Roell Honsberger, sends me copies on occasion when she thinks I would find it interesting.

Your crew does good work, keep it up. "Nome needs the Nugget and the Nugget needs Nome."

I watched the Discover series on the offshore dredging operation. I will not be there this spring, been there and done that.

Choose Respect rally brings DNR commissioner to Nome

By Diana Haecker

Last week, Alaska commissioners fanned out to participate in "Choose Respect" events all across Alaska. Dept. of Natural Resources Commissioner Dan Sullivan got to come to Nome to deliver the message of zero tolerance for domestic violence and sexual assault.

socially accepted drinking. A generation ago, he said, drinking and driving had been tolerated. "There's even the expression 'Have one more for the road.' It wasn't considered socially unacceptable," Sullivan said. Collective outrage, the campaigns of Mothers Against Drunk Driving and the rising awareness that drunk driv-

CHOOSE RESPECT – DNR Commissioner Dan Sullivan, left, Norton Sound Health Corporation SART nurse Barbara Cromwell and Mary David listen to a presentation held at last Thursday's Choose Respect rally at the XYZ Center.

At a Thursday afternoon rally held at the XYZ Center, Sullivan addressed a thin crowd consisting of board members of the Bering Sea Women's Group, sexual assault medical response nurses, Kawerak Child Advocacy Center officials, Trooper leaders Sgt. Charlie Cross and Ltn. Andrew Merrill as well as a Nome police officer. Sullivan said that he had been the Attorney General at the time when Governor Sean Parnell focused on "changing the culture of domestic violence and sexual assault" in Alaska. Sullivan said that Alaska has the dubious distinction to lead the nation in occurrences of domestic violence and sexual assault. "We can do better than this," he said. "It's not just about raising awareness, but also bringing up the anger level a little bit, saying that we can't allow this," Sullivan said.

"We call this an epidemic, but there are examples when we have a whole society come together and say 'enough of this'," Sullivan said. As an example, Sullivan talked about ing kills was able to change the culture. Sullivan said that the same needs to happen for domestic violence and sexual assault. He said that during an event at which he spoke in Anchorage, a woman approached him and she wanted a copy of his speech. She said that as a victim of domestic violence she always felt alone. People talking about the issue and bringing it out of the dark actually helps, she told Sullivan.

Kawerak's Children Advocacy Center program director Ryan Larson then spoke to the services his office provides for children who have been referred to them by the Troopers. Nome Police or the Office of Children Services. To give a sense of how many sexual assaults occur in the region, Larson said that between July and December 2011, 22 children were received at CAC. From January to February 2012, there were 13 cases. Larson said the CAC helps families by providing a safe atmosphere for the children and their caregivers to come in after the trauma happened. "We do everything to make them comfortable, feed them or let them rest - whatever they need," Larson described. The children are interviewed at their pace and when ready are taken through a forensic interview and a forensic exam with a sexual assault response team nurse

As the numbers show, changing the culture of domestic violence and sexual assault still has a long way to go. Sullivan sincerely said that change starts with awareness and society saying, enough already.

Individual charged with fraud related to initiative petition

A Fairbanks woman has been charged with submitting fraudulent signatures for the Alaska Coastal Management Program citizen initiative petition and four other misdemeanor and felony charges. Deborah A. Carroll was hired by the Alaska Sea Party to obtain signatures for the initiative petition. When the petition booklet was submitted to the initiative committee, the Sea Party became suspicions of fraudulent signatures. The committee did not submit the booklet to the Division of Elections with their petition application, but instead turned it in to the Department of Law.

Carroll admitted to taking names out of the phone book and signing the petition booklet, based on statements she gave to police. Improper subscription to a petition is a class B misdemeanor and the four other charges were related to the petition fraud. The prosecution and discovered fraud does not affect the proper filing of the initiative petition. Sufficient qualified signatures were submitted. Lieutenant Governor Mead Treadwell thanked Mayor Bruce Botelho for bringing the fraudulent activity to the attention of his office and the Department of Law.

• Piracy worries summer season gold seekers

Water, said. "We are sending out packets of information on the cost, that there is no road to Nome.'

'We are telling people, 'Your best winter will be your summer up here," Mitch Erickson of Nome Gold Alaska said. The company is putting in a campground with rentable space for tents and converted shipping containers.

The USCG will provide training for dredge and boat operators for a week at the beginning, providing voluntary inspections to advise miners on safety equipment and practices, Lt. Albright said.

AST Sgt. Andrew Merrill said the Troopers would refer boundary disputes and the like to the DNR. However he urged that crimes be reported immediately for Trooper action. The Troopers do not have a boat for going onto the offshore leased tracts area or on the public recreational mining waters off East Beach and West Beach.

"Enforcement on the water is going to be an issue," Merrill said. "We are working with the Coast Guard to bring in their assets.'

Miner Judy Martinson took the microphone to ask how miners were to handle people pirating gold, mining on leases that were not theirs.

This is a life time investment," Martinson said of leases she and her husband Doug bought. "How do you want us to handle this when the pirating starts? What to do?"

Those who are criminally trespassing would be charged, according to Andrew Merrill.

"We are hoping we will not be seeing pirating," he said, "with the work and education the DNR is doing. But if someone is out there actively stealing your gold, we will take the proper recourse.

The Troopers still have people in 15 villages to serve, so the Troopers would not serve as referees when someone with a faulty GPS or inability to read one strayed five feet onto another's tract, he said.

During a meeting with Nome Common Council earlier Thursday, Merrill said that the Troopers were looking for a boat and would like to moor one next to the Port of Nome rescue boat. That could be worked out, Joy Baker, harbormaster, said.

Enforcement plans sound like they would take too long, miner Larry Assad said.

"We're not interested in Trooper warnings, and you can lose $40,000 in gold while you are talking to the DNR," Assad said. "There are going to be con-fron-tations.

Several members of the public, including miner Shawn Pomrenke, noted that enforcement would be easier if boats were marked so the numbers could be easily read and the operator identified.

"There is no way to identify a dredge. They pretend they don't see you," Pomrenke said.

Nome Police Dept. Chief John Papasodora agreed and said the department was looking at a requirement for vessels entering Nome's harbor to have identification in a highly visible color with a number from City of Nome

Suggestions that miners coming into the area with no knowledge of rules and the ways of mining be educated came from several directions.

Miner Jim Hanson suggested there be formed an offshore miners association.

"You can do a lot on your own to educate these people," he said. "If they're not in line you can work with the Dept. of Natural Resources. If there's someone who is really messing up out there, two or three of you can get together and then say, "Yeah, this is serious—let's call the Troopers and the Dept. of Natural Resources, and they'll listen to you. That's the way it was in the old days. The miners association took control of things and had some credence. Otherwise the DNR might say a person is just a whiner.'

People who violated the law could lose their leases as fishers lose their permits if they don't follow state regulations, Brent Goodrum, DNR director of Mining Land and Water, Miners and fishers using the same waters have caused problems with accidental destruction of nets by dredges and even the malicious cutting of a net.

Howard Farley, who acts as pilot for larger boats coming to harbor, said dredge operators would have to learn the rules of the road and right of way practices for safety's sake. He added that some miners had the mistaken information that the offshore areas had been set aside for the exclusive use of miners-not true. Subsistence fishing had gone on for many decades and would continue, he said.

Farley cited cases from last year, including damage to his own net when a dredge went over it.

"It's going to be a busy place," Farley said. "People are going to have to know what they are doing and watch out for each other. It is going to be a very dangerous thing this summer."

Communication is the key, Farley said.

"They need to know they have to have waterproof marine radios. Cell phones don't get it," he said. "They are going to have to communicate with each other. DNR needs a dedicated channel.'

As it is hard to prosecute on fishing net damages, buffer zones to separate miners and fishers would be wise, Scott Kent of state Dept. of Fish and Game, said—just "a comfort zone to keep dredges away from nets. I know you guys don't want to get right next to one another-nobody in their right minds would, so just a buffer zone to keep these catastrophes from happening," Kent said. "We don't want to be reactive, we want to be proactive.

Goodrum vowed to add information on the DNR Website informing prospective miners of the subsistence fishing issue.

Mayor Denise Michels said there would be more meetings to discuss such issues before the water and the season opens in June.

The Nome Common Council met with the same set of officials Thursday afternoon before the meeting at Old St. Joe's.

Nome City limits give jurisdiction 1.63 miles straight out from shore and five miles up and down the shoreline, according to Brooks Chandler, City's attorney. Chandler, in response to a request from the Council, had prepared an ordinance requiring a permit from the City as well as the state for recreational miners. The draft ordinance set the cost of the City permit at $750 to help pay for services the City would have to pro-

"That's not enough," Councilwoman Mary Knodel said. "It needs to be $1,000.

The City is also looking into taxing gold that is sold in the City.

Cliff McHenry was all over that mining the miners with usage fees.

"The biggest drain on the City finances is alcohol. I don't see the drinkers paying anything extra," he said. "Now we're looking at the influx of miners as a cash cow.'

"That raises an important issue, DNR Commissioner Dan Sullivan said. "We do see this as an opportunity for the City and the state. We had a very successful lease sale.

"We're really here to gain information. It's important that it is not all negative talk. There are going to be growing pains and some incidences, but we want to work together to keep them at a minimum.

Tom Sparks of the federal Bureau of Land Management could see the positive side.

"It's a real opportunity for the City for real economic development," he said. "I'd like the DNR to consider establishing an office here. To be good stewards of the land, you have to be out here."

The number of boats and dredges entering the harbor may come to a limit, because of limited docking space, an issue to be taken up by the Port Commission. The City plans to add more floats and has a request into the legislature for the money, Michels said.

statewide: Anchorage, Matanuska-Susitna, Seward, Bristol Bay Borough, Emmonak, Ketchikan and

"This is a gift, a one shot deal for getting help to extend Nome's causeway into deeper water. With the federal deficit, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has said no new projects," Michels told the commission in a letter and then repeated at the work session. "If we did have to go through the federal process, the City would be a cost share partner and have to come up with 35 percent of the construction cost ($17 million) 25 percent of the design costs and 50 percent for the feasibility study. That's a lot of money!"

The port repair and modification project was already in the capital budget bill, Michels told the commission. This money would go for a second barge ramp on the west side of the inner harbor, new harbor floats and fill to go between two docking areas on the causeway.

There is competition between Nome and Kotzebue over establishing a deep-water port; laying politics aside and securing money for Nome's port further development would help position a deep-water port in Northwest Alaska, she said.

"I'm looking at regional, state, national and international opportunities," Michels said.

One idea is to establish a deepwater port at Port Clarence.

"The legislature's leadership understands regionally that with the road to Teller to access Port Clarence strengthens our request," Michels said. "We have community and regional support letters [for lengthening the causeway]—Sitnasuak Native Corp., Nome Eskimo Community, Nome Chamber of Commerce—and need to align the Port Commission's priorities.

A state DNR auction of offshore gold mining tracts has increased pressure on Nome's port and dock facilities, Michels declared. City of Nome is responding to state needs in developing its resources; it is time for the state to help Nome.

"These are our priorities and I am not going to blink," Michels declared to commissioners. We are supporting industry and State of Alaska's interests.

He voted for the smaller project in setting the original priorities, as it was shovel ready, Commissioner Jimmy Adams said. But with more information, he had no problem with changing priorities, he added.

Michels apologized to the commission for not making clear that she was following the two projects at the same time in different funding are-

With voters having the say so over the bond to fund the statewide ports, the "likelihood of passage is pretty good," Port Commission Chairman Jimmy West Jr. said. "We need to press Donny [Sen. Olson] and Neal {Rep. Foster] to make sure the capital projects get funded."

Harbor needs

In more detail, the capital projects sought for the harbor are:

• Snake River Moorage Expansion-Phase II —$3,500,000; because of a dramatic increase in mining dredges operating off shore, there is a severe shortage of mooring for small vessels. Expansion space within the existing inner harbor is limited. An area on the western side of the Snake River is an appropriate location for additional floating dock space. Concept level drawings anticipate a fixed, ice-resistant dolphin anchored system being provided to stabilize floats. Design efforts with dredging-quantity calculations are underway.

Causeway Ramp Dock—

$4,700,000; Port of Nome Causeway has two open-cell sheet pile docks; the Westgold Dock -built in 1989, and the City Dock —built in 1991. Over the past five years, Nome has seen a significant increase in large vessel traffic, frequently requiring vessels to anchor offshore until dock space comes available. A dock project would address this critical space shortage with an additional 350 feet of sheet pile between the existing docks, and a 100-foot section at a lower elevation to serve as a transfer ramp for moving rolling stock to and from barges. The design work for this project is also under-

• South & East Dock Fender Re-Construction—$1,500,000; U.S. Army Corps of Engineers completed the Nome sheet pile replacement project in 2007-08, as a follow up project to a navigation improvements project which successfully relocated the entrance to the Small Boat Harbor and Snake River. While the new sheet pile walls serve well for cargo and fuel transfers, the mooring fenders have suffered repeated damage from the ice forces each winter, showing the design is too light duty for an arctic climate. The City has obtained drawings for a new "floating camel" fender design. This project is construction ready.

• Deep Draft Port Design and Construction—$150,000,000; intense planning over the expansion and development of the Arctic has brought many projects to the forefront to provide a deep draft port for the vessel fleet that will be required to explore, design, create, maintain service this development. Though several areas have piqued interest among those with vision, port advocates say Nome serves as the only real option with an existing port facility, adequate fuel storage, expanded medical facilities, air transportation and community structure already in place.

• Barge Ramp Loading Dock Construction—$1,800,000; barge ramp inside the Small Boat Harbor has been in high demand since its construction in 2005, serving as a vessel launch and loading ramp for the distribution of equipment, cargo, and gravel throughout the region. The constant heavy use as a loading ramp, in addition to the erosion of the subsurface, has created a depression in the concrete that needs repair. In order to meet the demands for vessel loading and launching, a new open cell loading dock will be constructed north of the concrete ramp, which will be taken out of service and repaired during this project. Design efforts are underway

Good-bye, leaning pilings

In other business at the March 28 special meeting, the Port Commission accepted a bid from Pro-West, an outfit out of Wasilla, for a total $170,000 to remove unstable pilings and repair the Nome float anchor system in the Small Boat Harbor. STG was not far behind with a bid of $176,000, and RPM, Inc., was not to be considered at $970,000, according to commissioners.

Port Commissioner Cam Kristenson said that ice pressure jacked the pilings out of place. The mooring revision would weld a heavy chain to immoveable ice-resistant dolphins with anchor points for more stability, he said.

According to Robert Gilman, a Pro-West partner, the firm will attempt to remove the leaning piling with heavy equipment from the top of the ice while the harbor is still frozen. If that plan proves unfeasible, the company will put a hydraulic powered vibratory pile extractor on the May 20 barge from Seattle and extract the piling from one of Pro-West's marine vessels. Either scenario would be augmented by water-jetting equipment directed by an industrial diver to loosen the substrate.

ICE-JACKED—One of several pilings holding docks shows affect of ice pressure pushing it up and out of place. Several pilings lean thus in the small boat harbor and will be removed before the boating season. A $170,000-project will install a new anchor system with heavy chains fastened to ice-resistant dolphins with anchor points to give stability for moorage.

Court orders Greenpeace to stay away from Shell vessels

By Diana Haecker

As Shell Oil is getting ready for the first offshore oil and gas exploration operations to ever happen in the Chukchi and Beaufort seas this summer, a federal judge last week granted Shell a preliminary injunction against Greenpeace.

Federal District Court Judge Sharon Gleason ordered Greenpeace USA to stay one kilometer (or 0.62 miles) away from all Shell vessels in U.S. territorial waters and all U.S. ports. The injunction is in place until October 31.

A 500-meter safety zone (1,000 m. during towing) is also in place for support vessels and other equipment. These safety zones will be reduced to 100 meters for vessels transiting through narrow channels.

rewards

"We are pleased the judge recognized the risk posed by Greenpeace's illegal activities and entered the preliminary injunction," said Shell spokesman Curtis Smith in an email correspondence with The Nome Nugget. "Our goal is to avoid a repeat of the recent illegal boardings that took place in New Zealand and Finland that not only jeopardized the safety of the crews about Shell's Arctic-bound vessels but the protestors as well. While we recognize the right to peacefully protest Shell's planned Alaska drilling activities, we can't condone Greenpeace's illegal and unsafe tactics."

Greenpeace USA issued a statement saying that the boarding of Shell's drill rig Noble Discoverer was carried out by an entirely separate legal entity, namely Greenpeace New Zealand. In late February, seven Greenpeace activists including "Xena Princess Warrior" actress Lucy Lawless climbed onto the Liberian-flagged drill ship, trying to stop the ship from leaving New Zealand and heading to Alaska. They staged a five-hour protest on board the Noble Discoverer until they were arrested. Last month, activists occupied two icebreakers in Finland.

Reacting to the court order Greenpeace deputy campaign director Dan Howells said in a statement, "When an oil company with billions of dollars employs an army of lawyers to undermine one's right to peaceful protest and free speech, then you

DNR lease sale bidder qualification dispute lingers

By Sandra L. Medearis

Several miners continue to hold the bag on 16 offshore leases they bid on and won in the Sept. 28 lease sale staged by state Dept. of Natural Resources.

One of the bidders was Scott Meisterheim who is a miner featured in the Discovery Channel reality show, "Bering Sea Gold."

The number is not 16, but now 12 leases, DNR Director of Mining, Land and Water Brent Goodrum said last week. He said that he was aware of the concern that mining season is starting soon, but that he cannot produce a resolution. The issue is on the desk of Commissioner Dan Sullivan. Goodrum in October told Meisterheim and Mike Benchoff they could send again the paperwork that DNR said was missing. No one from DNR is saying what happened with four of the contested lease bids. Two missing from the list had Doug Martinson in first position and Benchoff in second position.

"My decision was appealed, so now it is with the commissioner, Dan Sullivan to decide, Goodrum said in Nome March 29. "I cannot comment as the issue is under appeal."

In a helter skelter registration process, prospective bidders signed a statement at the registration table affirming they were over 18 years of age and a citizen of the United States, and then received a bidding number on heavy paper to hold up during the outcry auction. Direct observation showed that no identification was required from registering bidders. Bidders took their bid cards and found chairs in the Old St. Joe's auditorium. People who did not have big bucks to spend sat among the buzz of excitement beside mining representatives from South Africa.

"I think they expected professional mining companies, seasoned bidders, not miners motivated to follow directions and succeed, but who were not as auction wise," Meisterheim said in a phone interview. "I was the newest, the rookiest guy there. I wished the people running the registration had been better prepared and trained for the process. I think they just didn't put the people properly educated for the event in the proper positions to run the lease thing," he said.

Meisterheim said he signed the statement; still, DNR said they did not have Meisterheim's paperwork—likewise for bidder Michael Benchoff. The department said in a letter to Meisterheim that the process was confusing.

Although Meisterheim received a bid card, #171, at the signup table and has receipts for deposits as high bidder on tracts 4 and 6, DNR sent Meisterheim a letter dated Oct. 27 as official notice saying that he and Benchoff's bids were disqualified.

The lease sale comprised two parts—an outcry auction on 53 underwater tracts and a sealed bid auction of 31 tracts.

Statement missing

The sale was advertised at least 30 days ahead, the letter said, and the requirements were spelled out. Under state law, for a person to qualify as a bidder on a mineral lease, the bidder must submit a signed, dated statement including the applicant's name, address, telephone number and a certification that the applicant is of the age of majority and that the bidder is a citizen of the United States or a qualified alien.

A solution

The law allows for the issue to be corrected through language on excusable inadvertence. The department had also found second and third highest bids with omissions of paperwork, Brent Goodrum, director of DNR Division of Land, Mining and Water, said in his Oct. 27 letter.

"Therefore, the two affected bidders may correct their omissions by filing completed qualification statement forms with the Division of Mining, Land and Water within 10 days of the receipt of this decision. Completed forms must be received by the division within 10 days from receipt of this notice and should be submitted to: [Kerwin Krause's (mineral property manager) Anchorage office address.]"

Goodrum goes on to state the appeal process on the letter that has been copied to other lease sale bidders. The deadline for appeals was 20 calendar days from the date of the notice

Qualification statement forms are attached to the Oct. 27 letter for Meisterheim and Benchoff to fill out.

He did sign the statement and submit it before the auction Sept. 28, Meisterheim said by phone Monday. He did send Krause another notarized statement as directed by Goodrum, along with affidavits from two individuals who said they attended the auction and saw Meisterheim completing his qualifying statement. The Nugget has received copies of these and correspondence, as well as e-mail copies provided by Kathy Sullivan, a friend who currently has Meisterheim's power of attorney in the issue. She had called Krause's office repeatedly, Sullivan said, "trying to get Kerwin Krause's office to accept proof that Scott Meisterheim did everything within the legal confines of the auction. The whole handling of the auction is a red carpet invitation for controversy and appeal with this auction."

A snag

And indeed, the second-highest bidder on Tract 4, Norm Stiles of Nome, who bid $13,500 to Meisterheim's $14,000, filed an appeal on Nov. 10 within the 20-day appeal period against the DNR's Oct. 27 offer to reinstate Meisterheim and incomplete bids for 15 other tracts with high bids by Benchoff. The right to pay for Tract 4 and mine it should go to him, Stiles said. Stiles' appeal locked up Meisterheim's two high bid tracts and Benchoff's 16 tracts. On Jan. 26, DNR set a Feb. 17 deadline closing the appeal process. As of March 29, the DNR had not ruled on Stiles' appeal.

Meanwhile, Kathy Sullivan and Meisterheim contacted Stiles by letter dated Feb. 7 with a proposal for settling the beef over Tract 4. Meisterheim would get off Tract 4 in favor of Stiles and Stiles would withdraw the appeal, freeing Meisterheim's Tract 6 win and the tracts won

A letter dated Feb. 15 to DNR Commissioner Sullivan from Stiles' attorney Guess and Rudd, LLC, accepted Meisterheim's proposal and withdrew the Stiles appeal on Tract 4, subject to approval by DNR and assuming that no one else filed an appeal on Tract 4.

The DNR sent Meisterheim a letter essentially applauding Stiles and Meisterheim for playing nicely over Tract 4, but claimed the right for any final ruling on the matter and the appeals for the Commissioner Sullivan.

On the phone from Thailand April 2, Stiles said he could not predict the outcome but acknowledged that Meisterheim had made an offer to withdraw his bid right on Tract 4 in return for Stiles withdrawing his appeal to theoretically free up the Benchoff claims. The Tract 4 bid represents three other investors.

"It's like any other auction," Stiles said. "If you don't dot your I's and cross your T's, they throw out your bid."

Meisterheim wants to pay for his other winning, Tract 69 $28,0000, and look forward to the new mining season.

"My intention is not to criticize the DNR. I'm doing the right thing [ceding his right to Tract 4) for the other miners to get their claims back. I did this out of kindness of my heart so the other miners can get on with their lives," he said.

And what about his stardom on Discovery Channel?

"I am going to be in season two. I'm building my own dredge to prove I know what I am doing. I'm going to rewrite my character, in a sense. I'm going to surprise everyone and come back as a guy with business sense, not play an asshole," Meisterheim said.

The possibility of conflict of interest exists, as the reporter attended the Sept. 28 auction, received a bid card and bid unsuccessfully on Tract 7.

TOOK HIS CHOICE, PAID HIS MONEY—Mike Benchoff, $20 bill in hand, pays his deposit on tracts on which he bid highest during a Dept. of Natural Resources lease sale in Nome on Sept. 28. The tracts have been tied up in dispute since DNR said Benchoff was not a qualified bidder. The DNR also disqualified bids from Scott Meisterheim. Helping Benchoff to register is Army Corps of Engineers employee Leslie Tose.

School board discusses a $13 million FY13 proposed budget

By Lori Head

Cathi Wojtanek, business manager, explained that the FY 13 budget, at this point, was a "living, breathing document" and subject to changes. With the addition of one teacher and one aide at the elementary school, the total expenses for all Nome Public Schools personnel, including benefits, adds up to almost $10 million, or 76 percent of the budget. The remaining $3 million in non-personnel expenses includes projected increases of 15 percent for electricity and utilities, and an increase in fuel from $3.52 to $4.00 a

The one expense the board members chose to cut was the 10 percent increase to student travel at a savings of $16,198 to the district. In the past, approximately $12,000 in pull-tabs or "rippies" helped fund state travel, however, board members were warned not to expect any gaming dollars in FY13. Wojtanek stated, "Two years ago, we were getting $3,000 per activity. This year we got $1,000 per activity. Next year we're not anticipating anything. So these kids are either going to have to raise all the money for state themselves, or we're going to have to take it, you know, and provide it for them which is part of the 10 percent increase.'

On the revenue side, the budget has the city contributing a total of $1,811,732, which includes the required 4 mills, or $1,037,732, and an additional contribution of $774,000. Board President Betsy Brennan asked if it was accurate that the city's additional contribution had remained the same for the past three years, and if so, stated, "Î'd like to ask for a little more.'

The proposed budget also includes $454,948 from the fund bal-

explained that if the state does pass on monies to school districts, Nome would focus on reducing the amount budgeted from the fund balance.

The Board of Education will hold a public hearing on Monday, April 9, to hear public testimony and comments regarding the proposed FY 13 budget. The following evening, Tuesday, April 10, the school board will meet again in regular session. The final April meeting will be a special work session followed the same evening by a regular meeting to adopt a FY13 budget on April 24, 2012.

Health insurance

NPS employees are currently covered by Aetna; however, the board teleconferenced with Alaska USA Insurance Brokers regarding three alternative companies. After comparing and discussing several cost increase scenarios, board member Barb Nickels asked for a recommendation and Alaska USA suggested a self-funded Meritain (2) plan. If Aetna's plan increased by 35 percent, it is estimated the school district could save almost $180,000 in FY13 by switching to Meritain. The board requested Alaska USA pursue Meritain and firm up quotes. Anvil City Science Academy lottery procedures

Lisa Leeper, ACSA teacher, presented information regarding ACSA's enrollment lottery procedures. Nickels asked if there were any changes. Leeper responded, "In the past we tried to make our enrollment look and match that of the dis-And in doing so, when applications were given to us, if we were deficient in a certain race, that race would earn preference in the lottery procedure and we found out we're not allowed to do that." She explained that in past years, with only the best intentions, both gender and/or race gave some applicants preference. In order to insure compliance with federal law that would no longer be the case.

ACSA is hosting an Open House on Thursday, April 5 at 6:30 p.m. for interested families. There will be a presentation at 6:45 p.m. with an opportunity to ask questions to staff, parents and students afterward. Applications are available now and due April 30. The enrollment lottery will take place in May for the 2012-13 school year.

Extracurricular and Co-Curricular Activities

The board looked over a first draft attempt to replace the current administrative regulation 6145. The AR deals with student's grades and the impact of one or more "F" grades on report cards or weekly Activity Progress Report Forms.

According to the updated AR, students must maintain a 2.0 grade point average (GPA) in order to participate in games, contests, productions or scheduled travel. Any student with two "F's" on a quarterly report card will be considered ineligible regardless of GPA. Also, a student with more than one "F" on an Activity Progress Report Form will not travel or participate that next

Security Camera Resolution

A draft resolution to collaborate with the Nome Police Department in researching and purchasing security cameras for Nome Public School sites was discussed and fine-tuned by the board for approval at their next regular meeting on April 10.

One NPS employee addressed the board and expressed discomfort with the idea of having to work around a bunch of cameras. Brawner explained that the cameras would be placed at entryways, ends of long halls and the office area for security purposes, not surveillance.

NES welcomes new principal

By Lori Head

Meet Robert Grimes, Nome's next Elementary School principal. Grimes hails from Georgia and more recently, Tuntutuliak, Alaska where he has served as principal for three years. He has been in public education since 1992 including seven years as a teacher, four years as an assistant principal, and seven years as a principal in both the elementary and high school levels.

Bob, along with his wife of 32 years, Nina, is ready to move to Nome to enjoy hunting, fishing, reading and cooking, especially on the grill/smoker. He is also ready to tackle some of Nome's educational challenges stating, "My ultimate goals involve improving literacy skills and making AYP.'

Grimes applied for the position in Nome because he knows he can make a difference. He explains, "I like working with people who want and are willing to work for the same thing: student success. Nome Elementary School provides that environment." He claims to be data driven, interested in the benefits of technology in schools and to possess a history of raising student achieve-

When answering the question,

"What could Nome parents do to help you?" Grimes responded, "In my experience, the number one thing parents can do at home is to read to their children." He added, "They should encourage their children to do their best. Another key is to become active in and support their child's school and to stay in communication with their child's Bob and Nina are looking forward to making Nome their new home and becoming active members, not only in the schools, but also in the community.

HIGH SPEED CHASE—Aly Daniels of Unalakleet is pursued by Carolyn Sam of Galena in the 5K ski race at the Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships, the rural state meet, in Galena. Daniels would win the race by a scant two seconds. Sam would come back the next two days to win the biathlon, and post the fastest split in the relays, thus capturing her first WISA Skimeister Award.

Team Alaska members compete at 26th annual Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships

By Keith Conger

Carolyn Sam takes the phrase "silver and gold" literally.

Sam, an outstanding eighth grade winter athlete from Galena, delighted the hometown crowd by winning her first Western Interior Skimeister Award this past weekend. She used a recipe that brought her identical snowshoe racing glory at the 2012 Arctic Winter Games in Whitehorse, Yukon Territories, Canada in early March.

Sam's recipe? Follow a first day silver medal with an individual gold medal, and then back that up with team gold.

On day one of the 26th annual Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships, on her home turf, Sam nearly tracked down 2011 champion Aly Daniels of Unalakleet in the 5K-ski race. Sam was on the defending champ's heals the entire race, but Daniels was able to hold on for a two second victory.

During the biathlon race the next day, Sam used 8 out of 10 shooting to capture her first Western Interior gold medal. Teammate Romay Shayen, who missed just one shot, took the silver medal. Daniels came in just two seconds behind Shayen.

Sam took care of business in the junior high girls team relays, and turned the tables on Daniels by posting a team relay split two seconds faster than her western rival. The effort helped her secure the top overall meet honors for her age category and led Galena to relay gold, as well as the team trophy.

Sam, like all the division winners, came from a pool of seven athletes that had performed for Team Alaska at the 2012 Arctic Winter Games. And all seven would figure prominently in the 2012 Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships re-

Unlike the junior high girls division, however, the other age categories were not as closely contested.

Junior Asa Bergamaschi from White Mountain, Team Alaska's top junior male ski biathlete, followed up a one and a half minute victory in the 7.5K-ski race, by posting a three and a half minute margin in the 5Kbiathlon race.

Although he was recognized as the top Western Interior skier in the junior high division in 2009, this was Bergamaschi's first high school division Skimeister Award.

Bergamaschi, and double silver medalist teammate Vincent Tomalonis, (a high school senior and 2012 Team Alaska snowshoe biathlete) would win the team relay and team trophy, both over Nome.

Junior Tim Schmidt, a first time Western Interior medalist, led Nome.

The White Mountain victory would break Nome's string of three straight high school boys championships, and secure the first high school team trophy for the west coast ski and biathlon powerhouse since

Team Alaska gold medal snowshoe biathlete, Caity Tozier of Nome, continued her season long dominance by sweeping all three Western Interior races. Her closest race was an 18 second victory in the 5K-ski race over her teammate, sophomore Rosa Schmidt, the 2011 Western Interior Skimeister and 2012 Team Alaska snowshoe racer.

The strong performances helped Tozier capture the high school girls Western Interior Skimeister Award -

leet, earned bronze and silver medals at the meet.

Tozier made sure her team would keep the high school girls team trophy in Nome for a third consecutive year. She teamed up with Schmidt, sister Hannah Tozier (a sophomore who earned her first Western Interior bronze medal) and freshman Jannelle Trowbridge.

The most consistently dominant performances in any division were turned in by Team Alaska crosscountry skier Kaleb Korta, an eighth grader from Galena. Korta posted winning margins of 2:17 and 2:16 in the 5K-ski race and 5K-biathlon races, respectively.

It was Korta's second Skimeister Award in as many years.

Korta, double bronze medalist Jacob Moos, and an army of talented junior high Galena boys, would help bring the team trophy back to Galena for the first time since 2008.

Double silver medalist Sikulik Johnson led the Unalakleet boys to second place in the junior high divi-

Top sharp shooters, hitting 10 out of 10 in the biathlon race, were Bergamaschi, Moos, Sigfred Brown of White Mountain, Kameron Reitan of Galena, Amanda Homekingkeo of Koyuk, and Anika Mudge of Ne-

Homekingkeo continued one of the most impressive shooting displays in rural biathlon history. During the past two years the eighth grade eagle eye has hit a perfect 40 of 40 shots in regional and state competition.

Each year, the Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships has one of the largest participatory biathlon events in the state of Alaska.

The 2013 Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships will be held in White Mountain.

Nome NYO at Bethel Warrior Dome invitational

By Hank Irelan

Two hundred kids from around western Alaska and the Lower Kuskokwim School District descended upon Bethel for a Native Youth Olympics meet. Nome was represented by Jens Irelan and Oliver Hoogendorn. Caity and Hannah Tozier were off to the State XC ski meet in Galena. The first event was the kneel jump, where Oliver jumped 20 inches and Jens 33 inches. Not their personal bests and nowhere near what the folks in the LKSD area did of over 50 inches.

Next the wrist carry was done the LKSD style, which is for time not distance. At this stage of the season this is good development for state where they go for distance. Jens and Oliver, our carriers, carried the Mc-Grath team and a few others.

In NYO it is normal and good assist opponent. Coaches help each other with technique and training tips. Even though they are hanging for time they are still carried slowly so our carriers Jens and Oliver got practice carrying the McGrath girls. Jens and Oliver had, when they were carried, a contest between themselves with Oliver outhanging Jens by four seconds. Oliver is feeling spunky now and said he wants to beat Emery in the wrist carry. Emery is healing at home from an ankle injury, so the challenge has been put in

The second day of Bethel's NYO Meet was to start with the Eskimo Stick Pull. However some of the teams were going to have to leave, so after a short coach's debate the first event was the two foot high kick. Again LKSD dominated the event. Jens got to 84 inches and within two inches of the first place competitor from the LKSD region.

In the Alaskan high kick, Oliver again was close to qualifying in this difficult event and is a few practices away from accomplishing this. Jens on the other hand was in the medal mix but just short. The one-foot kick for Oliver was outstanding in that he qualified and improved by 16 inches. Oliver started getting into the groove. Jens was high enough for first but missed the ball on three tries and only officially made 99 inches, which at this stage of the season is

The highlight was Oliver meeting a personal best with making the qualifying height! Then onto the onehand reach where again the dominating folks were the LKSD villages. Oliver made a first in being able to balance for the first time and Jens qualified. This is an event that will require more work on their part. The rest of the meet went the same way. Jens with a personal best in the seal hop, making the turn the first time in his NYO career.

We have more coming this season with a virtual meet on April 7 that can be followed on Facebook. Go to https://www.facebook.com/Nome20 12VirtualNyoMeet. A new you: How to restore the human body

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Here is a strange but true biological reality. The body you have right now is not the body you will have next year.

Every day your body forms new cells to replace the older cells that die, decay, or slough off. Like a microscopic factory, the tissues of your body use the molecules you eat and the gasses you breathe to manufacture new skin, muscles, bones, nerves, and blood cells.

The rate of cell turnover depends on the function of the cells in a particular part of the body. Cells that line the esophagus and stomach are replaced every 3-5 days. You make a new layer of skin every two weeks. Red blood cells live about 120 days. The cells of the liver are replaced every year or so.

Some cells remain much longer. Your skeleton is completely replaced every ten years. And about one half of the muscle cells that make up your heart will be replaced in your lifetime.

Scientists estimate the average cell in the human adult is 7 to 10 years old.

The only cells you keep for a lifetime are the cells in the lens of the eye (unless you have lens replacements) and the neurons of the cerebral cortex. In other words, your brain is yours from birth to death, but everything else is temporary.

Herein lies a bit of encouraging news. You have options regarding the body you will have 10 years from now. If there is something unhealthy about your body, in many cases you have a chance to swap out items for new parts.

But an improvement in your health does not happen by accident. Improvement requires thoughtful changes regarding nutrition, daily activity, sleep schedules, and sources of stress. If nothing about your lifestyle changes then you will always look and feel the same, perhaps worse, than you do right now.

In a sense, cell turnover in the body it is like changing clothes by changing just one thread at a time. If you use good material by eating right, avoiding tobacco, and staying physically and mentally active, you will stitch together a strong garment that complements your personality and lifestyle. Choose poorly and you will find the body becomes a poorly coordinated outfit that sags in unsightly areas and is easily damaged by normal wear and tear.

So next time you are walking the grocery aisle or scanning a restaurant menu, avoid merely thinking, "What should I eat for dinner?" Rather think, "What type of body do

I want to work on building today?"

Load up on the vegetables, fish, fruits, whole grains, beans, nuts, and dairy. Avoid processed foods, pop, sugary drinks, tobacco products, chips, and foods with saturated fats.

And do something physically active. Walk, bike, or ski to work. If one part of the body does not work well, exercise the other parts. The joints of the body are like machines that tend to rust with lack of use.

LOCAL

Furthermore, the body repairs areas that receive more use. For example, weight-bearing exercise increases bone formation in the parts of the body bearing the weight.

And do not get discouraged by the slow rate at which the body adapts. Though it may take time to see changes, day-to-day healthy decisions will ensure the body you are rebuilding is a healthy one.

Saying it Sincerely

By Father Ross Tozzi, St. Joseph Catholic Church Member of the

Nome Ministerial Society

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of Light, it was the season of Darkness, it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair." What Charles Dickens wrote about 18th century Europe is also true for the passion and death of Jesus.

We see the very best of humanity. In the Gospel of Mark, a woman recognizes the mercy and compassion of Jesus and she responds by a generous act. She anoints Jesus with a jar full of expensive perfumed oil. We also see the worst of humanity. Judas was trained by Jesus to be a faithful disciple. For reasons we will never comprehend, he betrayed Jesus handing him over for arrest, condemnation, and a painful death.

We see the wisdom of Jesus in gathering his disciples for the Passover meal. God had lead the Israelites out of the slavery of Egypt so that they would be free in the Promised Land. The Passover meal commemorated the beginning of that journey as the blood of the lamb on doorposts signaled for the Angel of Death to pass over the homes of the chosen people. Jesus commemorates a new Passover meal; the Lord's Supper is intimately connected with the passion and death of Jesus who will pass over from life to death and from the depths of the netherworld to the glory of the resurrection.

We see the foolishness of the Apostles. They are unable to keep watch and they fall asleep three times while Jesus is praying in the Garden of Gethsemane. We especially see the foolishness of Peter in thinking that he is so strong of character that he will not deny Christ and how he indeed fails three times before the cock crows twice.

It was the epoch of belief. Jesus trusts his Father despite his own misgivings. "Abba, Father, all things are possible to you. Take this cup away from me, but not what I will but what you will." And Jesus believes in us, he believes that we are worthy of salvation. He freely

Obituaries

Christopher Christian Ahkinga

It was June 12, 1985, and Dora Ahkinga was hurrying to the helicopter that would take her to Nome to deliver her baby, when she detoured into the house of the Little Sisters of Jesus. And there, Little Sisters Damien and Nobuko, Martha Kayouktuk, Margaret Soolook, and Annie Iyahuk helped usher an impatient baby into the world. Someone ran up to the Rec Hall to congratulate Orville on his newborn son. Orville proudly thanked him and went on playing pull-tabs, assuming Dora was safe in Nome with the baby. It was only when the health aide came up that Orville learned his son had been born just a few buildings away in the Little Sisters' house! This was also the same site where Dora had been born in her father's stone house that had once stood on the same spot.

Orville felt it was only right to give his son a name with religious significance seeing as how he had born in a place of religious significance, and so their son was named Christopher Christian Ahkinga.

Chris was born into a family that loved and lived their traditional Native lifestyle. He grew up learning to hunt, bird, fish and crab by watching his parents and siblings. He became a good hunter, and took joy in giving away his catch.

Chris's lifelong passion with Es-offers his life that we might share in the promise of eternity.

It was the epoch of incredulity. Jesus is innocent and yet he is arrested and put on trial. Many gave false witness against him, but their testimony did not agree. And even though there was no case, Jesus was unjustly convicted and condemned to death. The crowds who cheered him and waved palms as he entered Jerusalem a few days earlier no longer stand up for Jesus. Instead there voices are silent as others yell out "crucify him, crucify him."

It was the season of light, Jesus turned the other cheek. He did not use power to wipe out his enemies. Instead he accepted an unjust punishment in order to bring good out of evil. Jesus died for each one of us, especially for sinners without hope and those who put him to death.

It was the season of darkness. They mocked him. They stripped him of the purple cloak and they nailed him to the cross. They gave him wine drugged with myrrh. Then they crucified him and divided his garments. They reviled him and abused him.

It was the spring of hope, Jesus cried out in a loud voice, "My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?" Jesus prayed psalm 22 from the cross, which never gives up hope. "But you, Lord, do not stay far off; my strength, come quickly to help me. Deliver my soul from the sword, my life from the grip of the dog. Save me from the lion's mouth, my poor life from the horns of wild bulls."

It was the winter of despair, the veil of the sanctuary was torn in two from top to bottom. With death came many tears. Hearts were broken; dreams were shattered. Jesus was buried in the tomb and most had no hope left that Jesus would ever rise from the dead.

There is no greater love than to lay down one's life for a friend. Jesus laid down his life for each one of us. Despite our sinfulness and repeated failure, Jesus took on the worst that we might have the best. We retell the story of the Passion, of humanities' foolishness, so that we may grow in wisdom. Jesus does not condemn us for our incredulity; instead he gives us the opportunity to believe in what is true and eternal. He descended into total darkness that we might share in the light. Let us always remember that the power of God is greater than evil, therefore we should never despair but always let hope spring

On March 31, at about 12:45 a.m. AST received a report of a domestic disturbance in Gambell. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Gerald Aningayou, 36, of Gambell, for 2 counts of Assault IV and Resisting Arrest. Aningayou was transported to Nome where he was arraigned at Nome Court and subsequently lodged at AMCC on $1,500 bail. Alcohol is a factor.

Trowbridge Elected President

At the annual organizational meeting held on February 23, the local amateur radio club known as SPARC, elected Rolland Trowbridge as president for the 2012/2013 year. Jerry Steiger was reelected Secretary and Kim Carter was elected Treasurer. Public Relations liaison will be Dennis Weidler.

Trowbridge is married to Deborah and has two daughters, Jannelle and Bianca. He and his family sailed to Nome on the 30 foot wooden Bristol Channel Cutter, Precipice from western Michigan nearly three years ago. "It's an honor and a privilege to be called to lead SPARC for the next year. This is an opportunity to promote amateur radio throughout the Seward Peninsula and engage our membership in active participation while encouraging a new generation to get involved," added Trowbridge.

AVEC awards top 10 power plant operators of 2011

Alaska Village Electric Cooperative announced the Top Ten Power Plant Operators of 2011 during its recent annual meeting in Anchorage. The following plant operators received recognition for their outstanding achievements: Carl Rock of Brevig Mission; Harold Gregory of Emmonak; Darin Douglas of Koyuk; David Peterson of Mountain Village; Mickey Ashby of Noatak; Brian Ekada of Nulato; Rudy Hamilton of Shageluk; Edward Bekoatok of Shaktoolik; Winfred Obruk of Shimaref; and Greg Myas of Togiak.

Special recognition goes to Anvik and its operators for having zero power outages. Other communities with few outages are: Kaltag and Shageluk with just one; Elim with two; and Russian Mission with three. Honorary recognition was also given to a Lost Plant Operator in 2011: Franklin Simon of Huslia, who passed away in September.

AVEC has more than 100 plant operators that are hired by the cities to handle the day-to-day operation of the power generation plants and make sure the lights stay on in their communities. The Top 10 Operators of the Year are selected based on some of the following criteria: responsiveness to requests for assistance from consumers and AVEC personnel; performing duties satisfactorily, including routine maintenance; running the most efficient generator to maximize fuel efficiency; keeping the daytank full of fuel; total hours of unscheduled power outages; keeping the plant clean and an inventory of normal routine maintenance materials on hand; and turning in completed paperwork.

kimo dancing began when three years old, and he would drum on the plastic lids of coffee cans and Tang containers, until his brother Mike made him his own drum. He began memorizing songs, especially when he would get stuck at his brother's home in Wales, and spend stormbound days and nights watching tapes of Eskimo dancing. In 2003 he learned how to prepare walrus stomachs for drums from his sister, Sistuq - and after this there was no stopping him! Chris kept the Diomede drummers and others supplied with the very best drums.

Chris wasn't too interested in school, but he loved teaching others, and encouraged a whole generation of young boys to drum, sing and dance. Through them his passion for traditional song and dance will live on. Chris also had a special talent for learning new skills, and was proud of the things he made, like ulus, which he enjoyed giving away. Many young boys looked up to him as a leader, especially his nephew, Justin Ozenna.

Chris was skilled at other things, and worked as a Diomede Power Plant operator from 2007 to 2011, while at the same time working as the GCI technician on Diomede. In October 2011 he moved to Nome and began working as an aircraft cleaner for Bering Air, where he was well-liked and appreciated by his co-workers.

Even when he wasn't living in Diomede, Chris' heart was always there. He loved kids, and was especially fond of Ashley Olanna of Brevig, but his big heart had room for all of them. Chris was deeply devoted to his parents, and loved every one of his sisters and brothers, and his many cousins and friends. And they all loved him back many times over for his generous, kind spirit and gentle soul.

In his short life all Chris ever really wanted is for people to be happy, to be kind to each other, to forgive each other, and to celebrate all that is good in life through Native song, dance and drumming. He will be missed beyond measure.

Christopher is survived by his loving parents, Dora and Orville Ahkinga, Sr., his brothers Michael Ahkinga, Sr. and Orville Ahkinga, Jr., his sisters Frances 'Sistuq' Ozenna, Opik Ahkinga, Catherine Kakaruk, Jamie Ahkinga, Florence 'Yavik' Ahkinga, and adopted sisters Patricia Kruger and Alyssa Ahkinga, 24 nieces, 12 nephews, and four great-nieces.

Christopher was preceded in death by his grandparents Jacob and (Soolook) Ahkinga, Catherine James and Annie (Omiak) Iyapana, his sister Roberta Nancy Ahkinga, niece Sonja Grace Ozenna, nephews Timothy Ryan Kazingnuk, Jacob and Brandon Kakaruk, Elijah Okpealuk, James Jacob Ahkinga, and the extended family of Dora and Orville Ahkinga, Sr.

A prayer service will be held at the St. Jude Catholic Church in Diomede in the near future.

NPFMC says revised chum salmon bycatch study needs more work

The motion adds the following option to new alternative 3: General objectives and goals for the RHS would be in regulation, but the RHS program would not be in regulation.

Alternatives 1 and 2 remain as they are in the current draft environmental assessment. Alternative 1 is status quo (no action), and alternative 2 examines a range of hard cap options.

RHS modifications

The council's motion calls for these specific modifications to the

- Modify Rolling Hot Spots to operate at the vessel level and platform level for the mothership co-ops
- Prioritize RHS closures to best protect Western Alaska origin chum and Chinook salmon using the best information available.
- Use information being developed, such as Dr. Jeff Guyon's ongoing research, to identify areas and times more likely to have higher proportions of Western Alaska chum salmon.
- In regard to the base rate, speed up shoreside data flow by obtaining trip chum counts as soon as they become available.
- Increase chum salmon protection measures during June and July; for example, weekly threshold amounts that would trigger additional protection measures when bycatch is abnormally high.
- Initiate Western Alaska chum core closure areas. These areas would trigger during abnormally high encounters of chums believed to be returning to Western Alaska river systems

- Limit weekly base rate increases to 20 percent of the current base rate. Stop RHS closures in a region east or west of 168 degrees west longitude as Chinook salmon bycatch levels start to increase in the later part of the B season.
- To improve the tier system, consider a range of incentives that would lead to different levels of bycatch re-

Other to dos

Make the following revisions to the Bering Sea Non-Chinook Salmon Bycatch Management Initial Review Draft Regulatory Impact Review, Initial Regulatory Flexibility Analysis.

- · Provide information and rationale on the necessary provisions or objectives of the RHS that will need to be in regulation under new alternatives 3 and 4.
- Provide additional qualitative analysis on the use of adult equivalency (AEQ) and how the impacts to individual river systems may vary annually depending on when and where bycatch occurs. (AEQ estimates are used to estimate the impact of chum salmon bycatch on chum stocks and the communities that rely on them.) While the limitation on the genetic data only allow for large aggregate groupings by region, the composition may not be evenly distributed among the river systems included in a single region, and therefore may have differential impacts within the region that may exceed the average impact rate provided in the AEQ analysis.

• Under alternative 4, provide spatial analysis of the combined effect of the triggered area closures and the closures implemented under the RHS to visually display the available fishing areas, given the layering of potential chum salmon closures under alternative 4.

Court orders Greenpeace to stay away from Shell know you're doing something right."

Since Greenpeace New Zealand launched this campaign over 300,000 people have written to Shell stating that Arctic drilling is "one of the great mistakes of our age." Howells said that Greenpeace is just one part of a growing movement which will continue to oppose Arctic drilling peacefully and vigorously this year and in the future. "This desperate drilling program will do nothing to bring down gas prices in the US, but everything to endanger America's last true wilderness and play havoc with our climate," Howell said.

During a recent briefing with the U.S. Coast Guard in Nome, USCG Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo told community leaders that the Coast Guard is preparing to ward off protestors from shutting down Dutch Harbor during the height of fishing season when the Shell flotilla is coming through the region en route to their destination at the drill sites in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas. Ostebo said that people do have the right to peacefully protest and told Nome leaders that they shouldn't be surprised to see demonstrators arrive in Nome. This brought up concerns about protestors not only demonstrating against Arctic oil and gas exploration activities but also protesting subsistence hunts of marine mammals.

State readies for the anticipated great 2012 Gold Rush

The anticipated Gold Rush of 2012 has all the ingredients, and then some, of gold rush times in the past: the nationwide economy is in the hole, the gold price is strong and offshore gold mining has been broadcasted to a huge audience thanks to the reality show "Bering Sea Gold". On top of that the State promoted and held a quite successful offshore lease sale. It's Deadwood all over again, just at this time in history, there are state and city officials bracing for the wave of prospectors showing up in Nome with more than pan and shovel in hand.

The Commissioner of the Dept. of Natural Resources, the director of Mining, Land and Water, the newly promoted Lieutenant Deputy Commander of the Trooper's C Detachment, an envoy from the Department of Commerce and Economic Development and an official with the federal U.S. Coast Guard were in Nome last week on a listening tour on what to do with the expected onslaught of fortune-seeking gold miners this summer. DNR commissioner Dan Sullivan said in a press conference on Thursday that the state is taking a multi-agency approach to meet whatever is coming Nome's way this summer. "But really the big goal here is to listen and learn and just start to get a sense of what the issues are," Sullivan said. "My team at DNR have been working with Nome officials on what the issues are and get suggestions on how to address them.'

Sullivan cautioned to cry wolf too early as the influx of new people could bring opportunities for Nome's businesses. "We are all for being proactive and not waiting for problems to develop but to think them through before they happen and to make sure that this summer has as much opportunities and upsides as opposed to challenges and downsides as possible," Sullivan said.

He also said that the DNR has asked to include a disclaimer at the end of the Discovery Channel reality show to put out the message that picking up the gold doesn't come as easy as it looks on TV.

Asked about their strategy to get a handle on concrete numbers of miners arriving, Brent Goodrum, director of the DNR's Mining, Land and Water said that his division is working with barge companies to get hard numbers on the amount of dredges and heavy equipment booked on voyages to Nome.

DNR's mineral manager Kerwin Krause told the Nugget there are currently about 60 permit applications. Each operator of a dredge working on a state lease is required to submit a plan of operations and the DNR needs to approve of sub-leasing arrangements. However, there are two recreational public mining areas, on East Beach and West Beach, where an unregulated number of miners can hit the water with various contraptions. On West Beach, miners are limited to six-inch suction nozzles and 23 horsepower motors, on East Beach to eight-inch suction hoses and 46 hp engines. For both areas the rule says: miners only occupy a location while their dredge is there and in operation, no staking the claim. Also, dredges must stay 75 feet apart from each other.

So who will keep an eye on the miners playing by the rules? The DNR plans to station an official in Nome for the summer to assist miners in their operations. "We want to continue to educate folks about some of their responsibilities and just various things to be safe and successful," said Goodrum.

What about safety - both on the water and on land? Newly promoted Trooper Lieutenant Andrew Merrill spoke to the public safety issue that Nomeites fear will develop as fortune-seekers descend on Nome. Merrill assured that the Troopers would work with the local police department and assist wherever they can.

"We plan for the worst case scenario and hopefully not have it," said Merrill. But first, jurisdictional issues need to be worked out. There is not much chance that additional Troopers could be stationed in Nome, as there is a shortage of Troopers. "There are 22 positions open statewide and only seven [Troopers] are in the academy right now," said Merrill. But he said that the Nome Post is in OK shape with five troopers and one Sergeant. However, there is a lack of an adequate state boat to respond to emergencies. The city has a rescue boat that was available in the past and the Coast Guard would also bring assets into the mix.

US Coast Guard investigator Lieutenant William Albright said that his agency is aware of the challenge ahead. He said the Coast Guard has watched gold dredging in Nome for the last few years and considered the gold dredging operations "latent safety conditions", not only for the mariners but also the marine environment. He said that while the Coast Guard does enforce shipping and fishing rules, it does not enforce diving. "Part of our journey to Nome this year is becoming more versed in diving itself, just understanding how they work," Albright said.

Albright also said that environmental rules would be brought to the miners through education. While Albright plans to be in Nome for six days and get a handle on how miners operate and what the issues are, enforcement is a weak point as the Coast Guard has no permanent presence in Nome.

Albright said that for now the Coast Guard wants to increase safety awareness. He plans to come back to Nome from May 30 to June 6 to walk the beach with a colleague, take in what kind of vessels will be hitting the water and hold one-on-one safety talks with dredgers.

DNR officials said the Department of Environmental Conservation would be brought in should there be an environmental violation such as oil spilling into the water.

While Nome residents wonder how the newcomers would affect the perennial summer housing crunch, bureaucrats in state agencies are busy figuring out which agency is in charge of what. "The worst thing I can think of is if you have federal and state agencies in the middle of the summer trying to figure out where the extent of their authority ends or begins and that includes the local authorities," Sullivan added. "It sounds a little process-oriented but I think its good to have that squared away before summer," Sullivan said.

REMOVING LULU - After 22 years in the same place, the sunken berthing barge Lulu is being removed piece by piece. The City awarded a bid to Q Trucking to do the job.

Barge Lulu is coming out

By Diana Haecker

A barge that has been in the same spot for more than 20 years is about to be moved piece by piece to its final resting spot out of the water.

Last fall the City had awarded a bid to Q Trucking to remove the sunken berthing barge called Lulu, using the contractor's own best method. Freeing the partially submerged barge from the icy grip of the frozen port waters, backhoes and dozers started to work on digging out Lulu piece by piece. With sea ice still thick, heavy equipment can be driven to the barge and no wave action is hampering daily progress on Q Trucking's salvage work.

The barge was already in bad condition when it sank in 1990. A storm in August 1990 pummeled the city's berthing barge that was named after her 'birthplace' in Honolulu.

arrived in Nome in 1987. It was used as a transfer barge for freight being offloaded at the Nome causeway. During the 1990 storm, the barge partially sank and crashed into the causeway's armor rock. In a failed salvage operation, the vessel was refloated and driven to the western end of the sandspit, where it rested until now. At the time the barge could not be taken into the turning basin because the jetty – at the old Snake River entrance — was still in place back then and had not been dredged deep enough to allow passage for the 5'11" deep draft and 65-foot wide

The barge also had structural damage and fractures inside the bulkheads and on the main deck. The salvage effort ultimately failed and Lulu had remained in place ever cided last summer to have the barge removed because it causes shoaling inside the inner harbor and it posed a safety hazard. The contractor has until September to complete the work of completely removing Lulu.

NVFD tackles small fire at Airport Pizza

By Diana Haecker

Nome fire fighters responded to a dryer fire at Airport Pizza on Wednesday night March 28, being able to put the flames out in time before much damage occurred. Airport Pizza owner Bill Howell said that the fire started in the dryer after it was drying bar towels.

A janitor on staff called Howell around 1:30 a.m. on Wednesday night, reporting smoke and a visible flame inside the dryer. The janitor also called the fire department. Fire fighters were able to put out the fire with minimal water and removed the washer and dryer from the washroom located in the second story of the building. Howell reports no water damage and no structural damage to the building.

The restaurant was closed on Wednesday as staff and additional help from the Seaside Center cleaned and mopped the place all day. Howell sent out a message on Nome-announce, offering $12 and a hamburger meal for additional helpers to join the "clean-up party."

I was thankful to the community response and the Seaside Center for their support," said Howell. The washer and dryer need to be replaced and the room needs new painting, but other than that, there was no real damage, Howell said. "It just caused me a lot of discomfort, having to close the business for a day," he said.

The restaurant reopened for business on Thursday.

2012 the second coldest winter on record for Nome

By Diana Haecker

The winter of 2011/2012 goes into the history books as the second coldest winter on record since the beginning of weather data collection in Nome in 1907. The average temperature measured -5.4°F, not quite reaching the all-time record set in 1970/1971 of -9.6°F. "Our weather records show that from December 21 to March 20, the region suffered through the second coldest winter on record," said Jerry Steiger, Nome National Weather Service meteorologist in chief.

After Christmas, a three-week stretch of temperatures below -30°F contributed to the distinction that January 2012 became the coldest January on record. After a fairly warm February, the cold trend set earlier this winter continued with a cold and unusually dry March.

The coldest day this winter was January 5, when the mercury dipped down to -40°F. The warmest day this winter was February 8 with 38°F above zero.

February saw a warm stretch with temperatures above freezing from Feb. 6 through 12. Then the cold returned and March temperatures were at an average of 0.5°F -10 degrees below normal. March 2012 ranks as the 18th coldest on record. According to the NWS March was also unusually dry with only 6.7 inches of measured snowfall, which is two inches below the average snowfall.

The Alaska Climate Dispatch winter weather summary shows that most of Alaska had lower than normal temperature. The Bering Sea region showed the strongest deviations from the average temperature. In December, Nome saw temperatures three degrees colder than normal, for January 21.8°F colder than normal and February was two degrees warmer than normal.

Setting the cold record for January being the coldest month on record was also Bettles. Galena. Homer and St. Paul Island. National Charities want a bigger cut of the rippie pie

By Sandra L. Medearis

It's only a nickel added to a onedollar pull-tab, but it is a real big deal to a lot of people—City administration, local charities and pull-tab

The City is looking at revising the ordinance on taxing "rippies." Charities support the City changing the current policy of taxing the gross pull-tab sales to taxing the ideal net from pull-tab sales.

The way it is now, the City makes more money on the little paper games than the charities do. Take a box of pull-tabs selling for $5,760.

Sales tax to the City on gross sales comes to $264.76. The charity pays that sales tax on the gross sales of $5,760, but it takes the tax and expenses out of what is left—the ideal net-after prizes are subtracted. That's a difference of $96.64. City administrators say a change to ideal net would cost the City $300,000 annually and possibly make property tax rise. [See figures below.]

But, and it is a big one, vendors are not happy about making change to collect a nickel on a one-dollar pull tab or a dime on a two-dollar continued on page 4

Council approves bid on inner harbor upgrades

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council unanimously adopted four ordinances and passed a resolution without discussion and got the heck out of City Hall in 24 minutes flat Mon-

The Council voted yea on the following measures after their second

- To lease the City's winter snow storage building to Norton Sound Health Corp. for $1,600 per month from June 1, 2012 through October 31. 2012. NSHC will use the building and 1,000 square feet of storage land for construction support for the new hospital this summer.
- To approve the City's buying land from Alaska Gold Co. for $15,000. • To amend the recently adopted Port of Nome tariff to correct an oversight. The new language allows vessels operating out of the inner harbor during months of June through October to have the option to apply for a docking permit.
- To award the port of Nome Anchor System to low bidder, Pro-west, for $170,000. The company has a deadline for finishing the job—21 days from the time the ice goes out. Because of arctic ice forces, the float piles installed in 2008 in prior harbor improvements projects have jacked or moved out of alignment. The City of Nome has spent approximately $94,123 on design and materials, and received funding of $193,126 through Norton Sound Economic Development Council for construction. The Nome Port Commission approved the bid award at its March 28 special meeting
- To waive fees of $8,000 for use of the Nome Recreation Center during the Lonnie O'Connor Iditarod Basketball Classic.
- To waive the fee of an unstated amount for use of Old St. Joe's by the Dept. of Natural Resources for a City-sponsored public meeting LETTING OFF SOME STEAM - DOT employee Charlie Kowchee last week prepared Front Street for spring break up by directing steam into the storm culverts to remove ice chunks. Puddles have already been building up around town as warmer weather heralds spring.

Dear Editor:

I just finished watching the gold permit auctions on that dredging Bering Sea show— great, the way AK cut out all those small guys! I was going to visit Nome this summer but you won't need my tourist dollars with all those big foreign companies running everything. It probably won't be long before y'all start flying the South African flag. I think I'll also stop watching that show. It makes me sad when men of the last frontier start letting their officials "kowtow" to foreigners.

Man! I'm glad I live in a real state where real men still respect their heritage!

Murphy Cowart Live Oak, TX 78233

Dear Nancy,

My wife and I are still on vacation, but as always enjoyed this week's on line-edition of the Nome Nugget. I must say that I am very dismayed that the City council seems to be on the way to making recreational mining on Nome's beaches a thing of the past.

We all have friends in Nome that enjoy, and in some cases depend on the mining season to help them make it through another winter in a community that has just about priced themselves out of existence.

Adding another cost, and a very large one at that, to mine the beach on city property by it's own citizens is just plain wrong! If I were in town, I would take my concerns to the Nome Council at their next meeting, and I encourage anyone that thinks as I do, to do just that! We are citizens of Nome and I really think most of us are looking forward to this summer and the excitement that the supposed Gold Rush might bring, and not be afraid of it.

Let's not make rash decisions based on what might happen, but on what does happen. Come on Nome, let's bring some excitement back to this Gold Rush Town!

And to Council woman Knodel, we think you are just plain wrong in placing road blocks in the way of these visitors rather than encouragement and help.

Anyway, hi to everyone, wish you were here. Your neighbor,

Terry Day Dexter, Alaska

Hey y'all

Time's A Wastin'

It's Easter, it's snowing and in the single digits. We're almost through one of the coldest winters on record. The price of fuel oil is through the roof and gasoline in western Alaska is among the most expensive on the planet. This winter we were subjected to an emergency fuel delivery with an icebreaker escort.

We've talked and talked about alternative sources of energy. Have we done anything? Over a year ago our governor told us if we wanted to develop natural gas wells here we should get a state loan. Has anyone done it? What happened to our initiative? Where are our entrepreneurs? Here we sit. Doing nothing. We are waiting for someone else to do things for us. Guess what. They aren't going to.

We have to help ourselves. We need a group of Nomeites who have faith in our future and can lay the framework for natural gas development for our own domestic use here in Nome and the region. When we get our own town using natural gas from our own wells we will enjoy energy independence and financial security. Let's get a move on.

Arctic planning and infrastructure investment in Alaska

By Reps. Bob Herron and Reggie Joule

Due to ever-increasing activity related to shipping, oil and gas development, commercial fishing, and tourism, immediate investment in Arctic infrastructure is a foremost priority for Alaska and the entire United States. Action is needed to enable the responsible development of resources; facilitate, secure, and benefit from new global transportation routes; and safeguard Arctic residents and ecosystems. As international interest and activity in the Arctic continues to rise, America's preparedness in the region is of national security importance.

The four main Alaska Northern Waters Task Force recommendations on Arctic Planning and Infrastructure Investment are:

- 1. Forward base the Coast Guard in the Arctic
- 2. Fund additional icebreakers and other ice-capable
- 3. Continue the analysis and development of ports and safe harbors in the Arctic region4. Support Search and Rescue Coordination Centers
- 4. Support Search and Rescue Coordination Centers along the Coast to assist federal, state, and local responders

1. Forward base the U.S. Coast Guard in the Arctic With increased activity in the Arctic, the need to establish a Coast Guard base in the Arctic grows. Currently, the closest Coast Guard base to Arctic waters is in Kodiak, more than 1,000 miles from possible Chukchi Sea drilling sites. A greater overall Arctic presence by the Coast Guard is necessary, including the ability to stage assets closer to future shipping, oil and gas drilling, and commercial fishing activities. The federal government can begin planning immediately to establish an Arctic base and moving forward on interim measures for search and rescue and oil spill response in the region. The U.S. Coast Guard's Arctic missions are multifold. The EPA's National Contingency Plan requires the U.S. Coast Guard to oversee oil spill planning and preparedness in coastal waters and to supervise any oil spill response. With the Coast Guard ramping up its Arctic mission this summer due to Chukchi and Beaufort seas exploration activities, the time for an Arctic base is not some distant future date: it is now.

2. Fund icebreakers and other ice-capable vessels

At present, the United States has only one Polar Class icebreaker in service, the Coast Guard's Healy. A second Polar Class icebreaker, the Polar Star, is not expected to return to service until 2013. Other countries understand the need for more icebreakers: Russia, Canada, Sweden, Finland, and even China, South Korea, and Japan recently added or plan to add icebreakers to their fleets.

The United States Coast Guard Cutter Healy is a medium strength vessel utilized most recently as a platform for scientific research. Its design is less suited to military missions. This limited number of U.S. icebreakers presents a major challenge to the Coast Guard mission in Alaska. Having ice-capable vessels is vital to maintain sovereignty, continue scientific research, and provide emergency and oil spill response. It takes 10 years to design and build a new icebreaker. The federal budget currently includes money to begin this process – we encourage these efforts.

3. Continue the analysis and development of ports and safe harbors in the Arctic region

Studies by the U.S. Coast Guard, the U.S. Navy, the Arctic Council, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, and the Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities all identify the need to develop ports and harbors in Arctic Alaska. Given the long lead times for such construction, ports must be among the highest priorities for Arctic infrastructure. Building on the findings of the 2008 and 2011 state/federal Alaska Regional Ports workshops and the 2011 Arctic Ports Charette Study, the state of Alaska and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers should continue analyzing options for deep- and medium-draft pull tab. City law says the tax is on the purchaser and the 5 percent must be added to the price of the rippie, not included, as the current practice. Not good, say vendors.

"It's a nightmare administratively. We'd use every nickel in this town," Wayne Brown, owner of Nome Liquor, said. "It's impossible to do what you guys want us to do.'

Brooks Chandler, City attorney attending the meeting concerning pull tabs and other sales tax revisions. said that when conduct doesn't follow the ordinance, the ordinance needs to be enforced or changed to fit the practice.

"It is upsetting to continue known violations," he said. "It is the buyer of the pull tab that is the taxpayer, not the seller of the pull tab.

Brown was not alone in his objection to bookkeeping the nickel. Others who packed the Council Chambers at a work session March 28 were wet-hen mad about the possibility of major hassle over sales tax collection.

In fact, an e-mail came out of a meeting of charities and vendors distributed to Nome Common Council members listed vendors that would stop selling the games if they had to collect a nickel per dollar. Those vendors: Mark's Soap and Suds, Nome Liquor, Polar Bar, Solid Green Bingo, and Polaris Bar.

The charities signing the e-mail in support of a revision included: Nome Chamber of Commerce, Bering Sea Lion's Club, Ragchew Amateur Magic Inc., Nome Kennel Club, Nome Pre-School Assn., Nome Fishermen's Assn., Nome Volunteer Fire Dept., CHARR, ANB, Nome Aviation and Military Museum and American Legion.

Lloyd Perrigo had a different suggestion concerning the $300,000 the City would allow charities by changing to taxing ideal net.

'If the City has $300,000 to give to non-profits, give it directly. Don't strain it through gambling," he said.

While the ordinance is under revision, Councilwoman Mary Knodel wants language inserted that says pull-tab income goes only to nonprofits and charities in town, not any out of town. City administrators and Council were to continue hashing out sales tax revisions before the law comes up to a vote.

Norton Sound residents testify on chum bycatch issues

Editor's note: Following are comments by Norton Sound residents on chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery presented to the North Pacific Fishery Management Council last week in Anchorage.

Joe Garnie: I want to thank the council for allowing me to give testimony. I gave testimony last summer. You were all up in Nome last summer. Our 18 villages up there, the tribes, were all, of course, pretty adamant about a 30,000 hard cap on chum salmon bycatch.

I'm a lifelong resident of the village of Teller in the Port Clarence District. My immediate family were three generations of professional fishermen. We fished commercially, subsistence, all our lives. I fished in the same fish camp as my greatgrandparents, my grandparents and my parents.

And in my time, I have ceased fishing in the fish camp because of lack of fish. It's become uneconomical for me and my family to migrate to our fish camp to fish, as fishing is too sporadic. First of all, there isn't any kings, the red salmon are all but gone, and chums are our last stronghold and they've become sporadic. So that's to me, spiritually, a very devastating blow to my immediate family.

My children—my immediate children—wouldn't know what a king was if I brought it home. And a few years ago, we were hanging them abundantly in our smokehouse. I'm glad the council and everybody involved in the fishery is looking toward remedies for bycatch, but I think more immediate measures such as hard caps need to be taken.

It's devastating a way of life that salmon has sustained for thousands of years for us. Without salmon, the next step for a lot of families in my situation is welfare. That's a pretty grim picture. There's very little employment, and salmon is the only next thing that provides us with a way of earning a livelihood, both in trade—there used to be a cash market for dried fish—but back as far as my great-grandparents, we traded dry salmon for a living, basically. That was our living.

Thank you for this opportunity and the different remedies that you're looking at to curb bycatch.

Council member Roy Hyder: Joe, I was in Nome last year. First time I'd ever been there. I really appreciated the hospitality. That was great. I was in Mountain Village a year ago and greatly appreciated their gracious hospitality.

I'm just curious. You mentioned you don't go to fish camp anymore. I was wondering what river that was normally on? I'll give you my second question now so you can go ahead and work with it. You said a few years ago you were hanging Chinook salmon in good numbers. How many years was that?

Garnie: I'll say at least 12 years since I've put even one king in my smokehouse. And for our fish camp, mainly we fished on the Tukshuk Channel—the channel between Grantley Harbor and Salt Lake, a 10-mile channel, approximately.

Tim Smith: There's an old saying...when the elephants dance, the mice get trampled. In this situation we're the mice.

I'm the vice-chairman of the Seward Peninsula Federal Subsistence Regional Advisory Council. Our council unanimously passed a resolution supporting a 30,000 hard cap.

I'm also the president of the Norton Sound/Bering Strait Regional Aquaculture Association. Our organization's mission is to enhance salmon production in the Norton Sound/Bering Strait Salmon Production Region. That's the area from the mouth of the Yukon River to the Bering Strait. We operate the only salmon hatchery on the Bering Sea coast.

I don't believe that genetic markers are ever going to provide the answers we need about the impacts of trawl bycatch on Norton Sound chum salmon. That's unfortunate; it would have been great if it had worked. As you can see from the analysis, there is a long list of questions that can only be answered by knowing the stock composition of the bycatch.

The best science today, after millions spent on DNA analysis, lumps the Yukon River summer chum runs, which may be 4 million fish, in with the Snake River near Nome that in 2009 had a run of 891. That's not good enough. Of course, the genetics people tell us the answer lies in new and improved testing methodology. I don't think that it does. I think the problem is that Norton Sound chum salmon runs have not been isolated long enough to have diverged to the point that they can be identified at a population level by DNA. I can't imagine a mechanism that would allow that to occur. And all the available data shows that western Alaska chum salmon are genetically homogeneous. I'm not saying that we shouldn't continue to study chum salmon genetics, but I don't think we should wait for a breakthrough that may never come while our weak stocks go extinct.

Our hatchery offers a proven alternative for identifying Norton Sound fish by otolith marks. We have successfully mass marked embryos and recovered marked adults produced at the Hobson Creek Hatchery in 2006; the first definitive proof of stream of origin for Norton Sound salmon ever. Full bycatch retention will give us the means to estimate the numbers of specific stocks in the bycatch.

Hatchery production would also provide fish for harvesting by Norton Sound salmon users who have endured onerous restrictions for 30 years. It is also a way to rebuild the wild stocks that have not responded to other restoration methods.

I don't know if the council can do anything to recommend salmon enhancement for Norton Sound. If you can, we ask that you do it.

Council member Sam Cotten: Is it a chum hatchery that you run? Smith: We've hatched pinks, Cotton: What sort of volume are you dealing with?

chums and silvers.

Smith: It's just been test volumes; we're just testing the facility. We don't have a private nonprofit hatchery permit at this point. But it's been tested, we've gotten returns, we've proved that we can mass mark the fish. We're ready to increase production.

Cotton: Wasn't there one on the Kobuk, Noatak system?

Smith: There was; it was closed in 1996. It was the Situkuyuk Hatchery. That was a Fish and Game hatchery operated for 14 years. It was closed during low chum salmon prices, and it was very successful. If they had waited, it would be a good thing today. Now that prices are back up, it would be good. They shouldn't have closed it.

Change in Norton Sound commercial crab guidelines ensures stability

New rules keep commercial harvests steady, safeguard subsistence

By Tyler Rhodes, NSEDC Communications Director

Commercial red king crab fishermen in Norton Sound should be able to breathe a sigh of relief following the conclusion of the Alaska Board of Fisheries' recent meeting in March.

A change last summer in how the Alaska Department of Fish and Game estimates the crab population in Norton Sound meant that commercial fishermen risked seeing their quota cut nearly in half this year. Despite all signs pointing to a healthy and thriving crab population, revising the estimate meant that either the commercial harvest or the rule that governed it would have to change if fishermen were going to be able to fish at the levels they had for the past decords.

The Board of Fisheries put the concerns of Norton Sound fishermen and processors at ease when it approved a proposal brought forward by Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation to change the rules and essentially keep the harvest at the status quo.

"The red king crab population appears to be at a 20-year high in Norton Sound," said NSEDC biologist Wes Jones. "Our rate of commercial harvest has supported a number of fishermen while allowing the crab stocks to enjoy slow, steady growth."

To understand this change, it helps to understand how the current guidelines work. Each year, the level of the summer commercial harvest is set as a percentage of the "Legal Male Biomass." The harvest guidelines for the past 10 years or so have capped harvests at 10 percent of LMB. ADF&G uses a model to determine LMB, which has found a biomass between 3 million and 4 million pounds for the past decade. This has resulted in harvests between 300,000 and 400,000 pounds of crab.

Last year ADF&G staff took another look at the model and came to the conclusion that their formula for estimating the crab population had been incorrect for the past decade, resulting in an over-estimation for all those years. That means commercial crab fishermen were actually harvesting at an approximate rate of 12 percent for the past decade, not 10 percent as was believed.

With the new model lowering the population estimate by about 1 million pounds, the 10 percent threshold would have taken a big bite out of the commercial harvest had it remained on the books. "The reduction in the crab biomass was purely due to changes in the model," said Kevin Keith, a biologist with NSEDC. "The actual crab population in Norton Sound is doing quite well. All indicators lead us to believe that we have a stable or increasing population of crabs. It's a wonderful resource."

In spite of the stability of the crab population, the changes in the model

NPFMC says 'no' to tribes' request for 30,000 chum bycatch limit in pollock fishery

By Laurie McNicholas

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council decided not to include an annual bycatch limit of 30,000 chum salmon in the Bering Sea pollock fishery in alternative management measures under consideration to reduce the bycatch at a meeting March 30 in Anchorage. Chum salmon are among prohibited species in the fishery, and they are incidentally taken in pollock trawls.

Eight tribes in the Bering Strait area waited 10 months for the council's decision. On June 1, 2011 during a tribal consultation with staff of the National Marine Fisheries Service Alaska Region, six of the eight tribes presented resolutions asking the council to adopt a 30,000 chum bycatch limit and to close the pollock fishery if the limit is reached. The tribes were the Native Village of Teller, Native Village of Shishmaref, Native Village of Savoonga, Mary's Igloo Traditional Council, Native Village of Gambell, and the Native Village of Elim.

The resolutions included the following reasons for the request.

• Subsistence users throughout the Norton Sound and Bering Strait region are gravely concerned with the continuing decline of regional salmon stock;

• Elim, White Mountain, Golovin and Nome rivers have stocks of concern and chum closures.

On June 6 during a meeting in Nome, the council received a preliminary summary of the tribal consultation and a letter from James Balsiger, administrator, NMFS Alaska Region. The letter noted that council members had received copies of the written tribal resolutions. It also stated that NMFS is required under Presidential Executive Order 13175 to prepare a tribal summary impact statement to accompany rulemakings that summarize the nature of concerns identified by the tribes and the extent to which their concerns have been met.

...In addition, regulations governing the National Environment[al] Policy Act process require NMFS to identify alternatives that were eliminated from detailed study and briefly discuss the reasons why these were eliminated (40 CFR 1502.14(a))," Balsiger wrote. "It would greatly help NMFS fulfill these responsibilities if the Council would address the tribes' recommendation for a 30.000 chum salmon cap by either including this recommendation in the alternatives analyzed or providing an explanation why this suggested cap does not meet the purpose and need for the action and, therefore, was not included in the alternatives analyzed."

The council heard testimony during the Nome meeting in support of a 30,000 chum cap from a number of individuals and from representatives of western Alaska communities both within and outside the Bering Strait region. The council took no action on the issue at the Nome meeting.

On June 15 NMFS received copies of resolutions calling for a 30,000 chum salmon bycatch cap from two more Bering Strait tribes. the Native Village of Koyuk and the Native Village of St. Michael.

hope, is that we would have a meaningful interaction and a meaningful conversation and that we would get an informed position, and I think that's what we heard in public testimony even at this meeting from people who said, you know, we don't have a number or a position, but

(M)y hope was as we moved forward in this process that we would have a meaningful interaction with tribes, that they would come forward and bring a new position that's based on the information that we currently have about what would best protect the stocks that they rely on,

- Cora Campbell, ADF&G

Council responds to tribes

At the NPFMC meeting held March 30 in Anchorage, several council members provided reasons for not including a 30,000 chum hard cap in the alternatives analyzed in an initial review draft environmental assessment of Bering Sea chum salmon bycatch management measures. Following is a summary of their com-

Cora Campbell, commissioner of the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game said the council had reacted to compelling testimony from western Alaskans at the Nome meeting by restructuring the analysis to include some very low chum bycatch hard caps in June and July to better target and protect western Alaska stocks.

Genetic analysis indicated a higher proportion of chum bycatch in the pollock fishery in June and July was from western Alaska than in August through October in 2005-2009. The council adopted a motion by Campbell at the Nome meeting to study option 1b under the hard cap alternative to apply a chum salmon bycatch limit ranging from 15,600 to 110,136 fish to vessels participating in the directed pollock fishery during June and July.

"...(M)y hope was as we moved forward in this process that we would have a meaningful interaction with tribes, that they would come forward and bring a new position that's based on the information that we currently have about what would best protect the stocks that they rely on," Campbell said. "And I think we have so much more information than we did a year ago when [the tribal resolutions] were drafted, and so that's my

we're going to go back and come to you with something, and so I think that conversation is still ongoing....

Duncan Fields: length about amending the motion with the 30,000 number because I wanted to underscore my desire, and I think the council's desire to substantially reduce chum salmon bycatch, but I don't think that amendment and that number moves us toward our goal, which is to incentivize the industry to reduce chum bycatch with minimal impact on the current Chinook savings program in a timely manner, and...one of the reasons I've been dissuaded from making that amendment is because I think that number is so low that there'd be substantial industry pushback and maybe a sense of breach of trust relative to working with the council to solve this problem together...

Fields cited data in the environmental assessment executive summary on pages 4 and 14 that influenced his decision. Page 4 includes a table listing the number of participating vessels in the pollock fishery, the total allowable catch of pollock and the chum salmon bycatch for each year from 2003 through 2011. Chum bycatch numbers ranged from 704,552 fish in 2005 to 13,222 in 2010, and jumped to 191,445 in 2011. Page 14 lists suboptions for chum bycatch limits ranging from 50,000 to 353,000 fish under option 1a of the hard cap alternative, to apply a chum bycatch limit to vessels participating in the directed pollock fishery for the entire B season. Page 14 also lists the range of chum bycatch limits analyzed under option 1b of the hard cap alternative that applies to June and July (15,600 to 110,136 fish).

John Henderschedt: "My comments are intended to enhance and amplify and build upon the comments that have already been made about this, not in any way to contradict these. I would like to speak very specifically to that request.... (I)n the existing analysis we have an alternative for a 50,000 fish cap, and on the average that results in over 330,000 metric tons of foregone catch of pollock. I think it's a safe assumption that with an even lower hard cap the foregone catch is higher, and in my view, the expected foregone catch lost then in the pollock fishery disrupts the balance between national standard 9 and national standard 1.'

The council's action to manage chum bycatch in the pollock fishery must be consistent with all 10 national standards under the Magnuson-Stevens Conservation and Management Act. The environmental assessment says the most relevant national standards for this action are number 1 (prevent overfishing while achieving optimum yield for each fishery in the U.S. fishing industry) and number 9 (minimize bycatch to the extent practicable).

Henderschedt continued: "... I think as a goal, as Mr. Fields said, 30,000 fish is a laudable goal. I mean I think it's one that the council should uphold, but having a goal and setting a fixed hard cap are two different things. And for my concern over optimum yield and national standard 9, I think we should be very clear that the alternative of 30,000 fish hard cap should be listed in the analysis at this point as an alternative considered but not included in the range of alternatives.'

Dave Benson: "I was the one that asked one of the testifiers for the genesis of that number, and I don't know if we've even had testimony to describe that, if it was based on some sort of average over a certain window of time or just a number picked out of the air, but I think we have to take a step back and look at what we have in our executive summary...on page 4: Nine years worth of data, and it's fluctuated everywhere from 704,000 in 2005 down to 13,000 in 2010—a huge fluctuation-but 7 of those 9 vears would have been over the 30,000 cap, would have resulted in shutting down the pollock fishery.

"Then you have to ask yourself how much you're benefiting or contributing to stocks returning to Western Alaska rivers, the middle and upper Yukon, and the numbers get pretty small when you take 58 percent off for the Japanese and Russian hatchery chum," Benson said. You're getting down to some very small numbers, and it's very difficult to measure the impact, and I agree that impact can certainly be greater on one river system than another, but as Mr. Henderschedt pointed out, [in] the worst case scenario-350,000 tons of pollock at risk-30,000 is going to push that number some-meant that the harvest level was going to be drastically reduced from the range of 300,000 to 400,000 pounds down to between 200,000 and 300,000 pounds. Concerned with this development, NSEDC Director of Fisheries Research and Development Charlie Lean sprang into action. "We submitted a proposal to the Board of Fisheries that would maintain harvest levels in the range that we have seen recently-and also raise harvest levels in the event that we have a large surplus of crab out there," Lean said.

Working with ADF&G, the NSEDC biologists refined their proposal so that it would be acceptable to both state and federal managers.

The refined proposal, which was approved by the Board of Fisheries, has the following harvest guidelines for the summer commercial crab fishery:

- No harvest below 1.25 million pounds LMB
- 7 percent harvest limit between 1.25 and 2 million pounds LMB
- 13 percent harvest limit between 2 and 3 million pounds LMB
- 15 percent harvest limit above 3 million pounds LMB
- "This was a win for everybody," Keith said. "The change allows our crab fishermen to continue harvesting at the same level while also protecting the resource if the population decreases and allowing increased harvest at higher population levels." The new guidelines, with their protections, also benefit subsistence crabbers. "The intent of the regulation is to maintain a healthy population level and prevent the kind of boom-and-bust cycles that have a negative impact on subsistence," Lean said.

U.S. and Russia team up to conduct ice seal survey

A team of researchers from the U.S. and Russia this week kicked-off the largest survey effort ever to estimate how many ice-associated seals live in the Bering Sea region, announced the National Oceanoand Atmosperic graphic Administration.

This large scale, springtime aerial survey will begin this week from Nome. Scientists will use advanced imaging systems and modern statistical techniques to provide the first comprehensive estimates of abundance for the four species of ice-associated seals found in the Bering Sea: ribbon seals, spotted seals, bearded seals and ringed seals. Survey flights will also originate from Bethel, Dillingham, and St. Paul. Each flight will typically last between five and seven hours.

Aerial surveys are the best way to study ice-associated seals in their natural environment while covering large areas in a relatively short amount of time. Spring is the best time to survey because the seals concentrate within the Bering Sea ice pack and spend more time on the ice where they can be seen and counted) while they have pups, breed and molt.

In the U.S. surveys, two types of aircraft will be used: a NOAAowned and operated Dehavilland Twin Otter aircraft and a chartered long-range Aero-Commander 690.

Because the aircraft will be flying at an altitude of 1,000 feet, too high for the human eye to identify species, high-resolution digital cameras will capture images to be analyzed back in the lab for species identification. Thermal sensors will be used in tandem with the digital cameras to pinpoint the seals, thus reducing the number of images that will need analyzing.

"The most novel thing about the survey is the pairing of two devices that have already been used to survey other marine mammals," said Peter Boveng, one of the principal investigators of the survey, along with Michael Cameron and Erin Moreland. "Thermal or infrared cameras are good at detecting seals on ice, which are very warm relative to their surroundings, but not good at revealing the species of seals. High-resolution digital photos are good for species identification, but very labor intensive for detecting and counting seals. Putting the two together creates a more efficient system in which the thermal camera finds the seals and the photo camera allows us to identify the seal species."

The planned survey will include nearly 19,000 nautical miles of track lines over U.S. waters and 11,000 nautical miles over Russian waters, and will last into May. Another spring survey is planned for 2013.

Springtime in the Bering Sea is important not only for seals, but for many other species and the Alaska coastal communities that depend upon them. The seal survey team will be communicating regularly with Alaska Native villages to ensure that the surveys do not conflict with subsistence hunting activities, particularly bowhead whaling around the communities on St. Lawrence Island and in the Bering Strait.

The results of this study will contribute to the scientific understanding of these unique marine mammals and will be used to identify, evaluate and resolve conservation concerns as required by the Marine Mammal Protection Act. The results will also help to assess the risk posed by loss of sea-ice habitat that may occur due to ongoing and anticipated warming of the Arctic climate, a key concern addressed in status reviews that NOAA has conducted on all four species under the Endangered

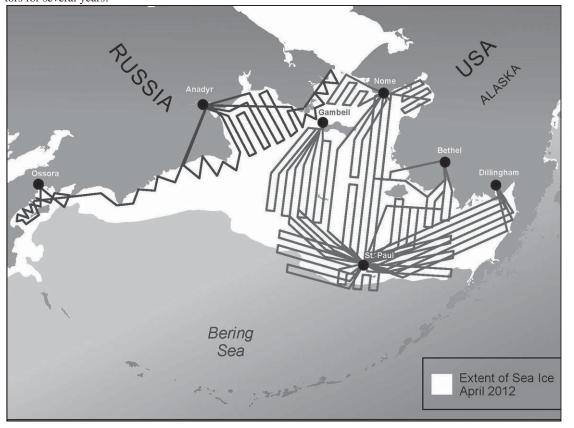

Studying seals in the Bering Sea and Arctic waters poses many challenges that limit the ability for scientists to learn about these special animals. The Bering Sea's remote location, along with the cold and unpredictable weather, limits scientists' ability to study these animals in their natural habitat. Figuring out how to efficiently and safely survey the region for seals has been a focus for scientists at the NOAA Alaska Fisheries Science Center and a multiagency team of Russian collaborators for several years.
